RIVER AND HARBOR APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session. The Clerk read as follows:

Improving Missouri River from the mouth of Fort Benton: For maintenance, $300,000, of which amount $150,000 may be expended between the mouth and Kansas City, $100,000 between Kansas City and Sioux City, and $50,000 between Sioux City and Fort Benton: Provided, That these amounts shall be applied in the first instance for the purpose of clearing the river of snags with a view to navigation, and no part of such amount shall be applied for revetment or the protection of banks of the stream unless such revetment or protection is directly and necessarily required for purposes of navigation, and the Secretary of War may cause a survey to be made of said river from its mouth to Kansas City, and from Kansas City to Sioux City, such examination to be made, in his discretion, without further general instrumental survey.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out in that paragraph all in line 9, after the word "navigation," and also lines 10, 11, 12, and 13.

The object of that is to transfer the provision for a survey to the section relating to surveys, and I give notice when that section is reached I shall offer this provision in a slightly modified form.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. Burton].

The question was taken; and the amendment was agreed to.
Mr. SHACKLEFORD. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri SHACKLEFORD] offers an amendment, which the Clerk will re-

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by striking out on page 75, in line 24, the words "three hundred thousand" and insert in lieu thereof the following: "one million one hundred and fifty thousand;" and by striking out of line 25, on page 75, the words "one hundred and fifty thousand" and inserting in lieu thereof the words "one million."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. I am willing to have that go to a vote right away without discussion.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken; and the amendment was rejected. Mr. SCOTT. Mr. Chairman, I wish to offer the following amendment, to be inserted at the close of the section.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman offers an amendment which the Clerk will report.

Improving the Missouri River at the city of Elwood, Doniphan County, Kans., $75,000.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. Chairman, in explanation and support of the amendment I have offered, I would like to ask permission that the Clerk may read the concurrent resolution adopted by the legislature of Kansas, which I have sent to the desk

The CHAIRMAN. The paper will be read in the time of the gentleman from Kansas.

The Clerk read as follows:

House concurrent resolution No. 11.

Whereas the Missouri River at a point bordering on the city of Elwood, in Doniphan County, Kans., is washing and cutting away the land within said city and endangering the homes of the people residing there; and

Whereas said city is in danger of being washed entirely away and the inhabitants of said city are in danger of great loss of property and of much suffering; and

Whereas no steps have ever been taken or means employed by the General Government to protect the banks along said river at said place; and

General Government to protect the banks along said river at said place, and
Whereas the sums of money heretofore appropriated by the Congress of the United States, and intended by Congress to be used in protecting the banks on both sides of said river at said place, have been used exclusively to protect the banks and property on the Missouri side only:

Therefore be it resolved by the house of representatives (the senate concurring therein), That the Senators and Representatives from Kansas in Congress be instructed to use every honorable effort to secure an appropriation by Congress of not less than $75,000 to be used exclusively on the Kansas side of said river to protect the banks thereof at the point where said river borders upon said city of Elwood. And that a copy of this resolution be sent by the secretary of state to each Senator and Representative in Congress from this State.

I hereby certify that the above concurrent resolution originated in the house, and passed that body January 30, 1907.

J. S. SIMMONS,

Speaker of the House.

Speaker of the House.
D. Y. WILSON,

Passed the senate January 31, 1907.

W. J. FITZGERALD, President of the Senate. W. J. KRETSINGER, Secretary of the Senate.

Approved February 1, 1907.

E. W. Hoch, Governor.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I raise the point of There is no project looking to it. At the same order on that. time I reserve the point of order in order to let the gentleman

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would think the point of order came too late.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. Chairman, the resolution which has just been read describes a condition which must appeal very strongly to the sympathies of every member of this committee. It appears from these resolutions, which come here with the authority of both houses of our State legislature and the approval of the governor, that by reason of the ravages of the Missouri this little town of Elwood is threatened with absolute destruction, destruction which would mean total loss to the property owners of the town, which can not be recouped by any sort of insurance, and which would bring a great many people to bankruptcy and probably to actual want.

Mr. GARRETT rose.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. Scorr] yield to the gentleman from Tennessee? Mr. SCOTT. For a question.

Mr. GARRETT. Are there any levees there? Mr. SCOTT. Oh, no. There are no levees on the Missouri at that point.

Mr. GARRETT. The gentleman's request here is for an appropriation to build a levee?

Mr. SCOTT. Not for a levee. It is for an appropriation to build what they call a "revetment," with which to protect the banks from being washed by the current of the river. I understand, Mr. Chairman, that this amendment will probably be opposed because of the provision in the section preceding, to the effect that-

No part of the money hereby appropriated shall be applied for revet-ment or the protection of the banks of the stream, unless such revet-ment or protection is directly or necessarily required for the purposes of

But I believe this improvement could be made under that rule without being obnoxious to it, for the reason that it would contribute directly to the navigation of the stream.

As I understand the geography of that locality, the town of Elwood is situated at the head of a peninsula which has been formed by a bend in the Missouri River. At the extremity, of this peninsula, across the river on the Missouri side, is the city of St. Joseph, and I am told that the people of that city are very greatly exercised for fear that the river may change its channel by sweeping across the neck of the peninsula at Elwood, and thus leave St. Joseph many miles from any channel that will be available for navigation. It needs no argument, of course, to show that if the river should in this way start to change its bed it would destroy, for many years at least, any hope of navigation in either the old or new channel, and I believe, therefore, that this amendment should be adopted in the interest of navigation of the river as well as for the protection of the people of the city of Elwood.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. I yield to the gentleman from Iowa,

Mr. Chairman, as far as I have any right.

Mr. HUBBARD. Mr. Chairman, I had prepared several amendments which I desired to offer to this paragraph of the bill. I am admonished, however, by the fate of various gentlemen who have run into collision with the machine that there men who have run into collision with the machine that there is but little to be gained by offering any amendments to this bill. I shall not, therefore, cast myself before the wheels of the car. Let us be duly thankful, brethren of the Missouri Valley, that the committee has left to us our place on the map. I wish especially to call attention to this, that the one quality which is considered as entitling any river to any appropriation to the special of the temporal carried by it. The Missouri River is the question of the tonnage carried by it. The Missouri River is navigable, and has been since Lewis and Clark pursued its pathway across the continent for two thousand four hundredodd miles. It has in the past carried a great commerce. will in the future carry a great commerce. The cause of the present diminution of commerce is not any lack of navigable quality in the Missouri River. It is the result of the diversion of commerce from north to south, along the natural line of flow, to eastward, along the great lines of railway

But to this hour, at this very moment, the existence of the Missouri and the existence of the Mississippi River as navigable streams and their maintenance as navigable streams is the best possible regulator of charges upon commerce for all that region. The Missouri River and the Mississippi River mark the base lines for freight charges. As the gentleman from Missouri only a short time ago showed, the mere threat of commerce on the Missouri River resulted in a substantial reduction of freight rates. Iowa in this year of grace has, it is estimated, tion of freight of 1 cent per bushel upon that corn and its products means a reduction of $4,000,000 in the cost of marketing.

Yet it is apparently proposed, in all seriousness, to expend the munificent sum of $300,000 upon the 2,400 miles of river from the mouth to Fort Benton, coupling this gift with the admonition that unless we at once get busy running steamboats, care for the river will cease.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HUBBARD. I should like a minute or two more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman asks unanimous consent that his time be extended for two minutes. Is there objection? After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. HUBBARD. Mr. Chairman, this appropriation is intended especially for dredging; for the removal of snags; for improvements which will scarcely last until the boat passes by that makes them. Dredging the channel of the Missouri River You might as well undertake to dredge a channel for the north wind and expect it to be permanent. You never can improve the channel of the Missouri River in that way or improve its navigability. The one way of improvement is by the protection of the banks, and that is expressly denied in this bill. The only method is to hold the stream within such limits as may prevent the vast destruction now involved in its unrestrained flow and at once save the fertile fields and fix the channel.

It is true that but few tons of freight are now carried, but it is also true that down that stream annually goes freight as precious as the coal of Pennsylvania. Our acres are carried, millions of tons, worth millions of dollars, every year. I stood on the bank of the Missouri this fall and looked out over a desolate and barren sand bar which had replaced 1,700 acres of ground as fertile as the sun shines upon. In my district alone thousands upon thousands of dollars' worth of real estate are freighted down that river every year. And we are told that it it is well worth the while to spend $63,000,000 upon dams and locks to slack-water the Ohio to move Pennsylvania coal, but it is no concern of the United States to spend a cent to hold fast and preserve our acres. It is a matter of grave public concern to see that John Smith carries his corn to market by the river, but it is of no public concern that the river should sweep away the land that bears the corn. [Loud applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. Mr. ELLIS. Mr. Chairman, at the risk of seeming to lack sympathy for those people at Elwood in the dire straits de-picted by the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. Scorr], I must suggest to the committee the utter impossibility of this proposition. In justice to other communities along the Missouri River not only, but to other communities as well on other rivers that are provided for in this bill, this provision for the protection and relief of these people can not be made. If it is true that revetment is necessary there to save private property, at a cost of $75,000, it is equally true that like work of like cost would be required at Parkville, 40 or 50 miles below, and at other points on the river which I might name. Now, we are trying to make a new start along rational lines, to restore commerce on the Missouri River. We want the moderate amounts appropriated by this bill to be applied primarily and directly to improving navigable conditions. I think that ought to be satisfactory to all of us on this floor. Those of us who, without any doubt or misgiving, are for improving and using the channel of the Missouri River surely must be glad and satisfied that the money appropriated is to be so devoted and expended. Those, if any, who have misgivings about that certainly will be better satisfied if they know the amounts carried in the bill will be so expended,

Mr. Chairman, efforts heretofore made by Congress to develop this great river have resulted in disappointments both here and out there. It has been suggested in this debate that for the large sums appropriated we have little to show. There is too much truth in this charge. We have something left, however, in view of the mistakes that have been made-a good deal, in Wherever money has been spent systematically, rationally, and for the primary purpose of permanent improvement of the channel, results have been lasting and, to a high degree, satisfactory. I hope we have learned from our mistakes. It satisfactory. I hope we have learned from our mistakes. It will be a part of the purpose of the surveys provided for in this bill to bring to the Congress a showing of what has been done that is permanent and lasting. The chairman, in his opening statement, said in effect that we were to be given a new trial out there. We expect to make good. In view of these considera-tions, and in view of the policy of the committee, which under the circumstances and conditions as they exist I approve, I trust that this amendment will be voted down.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, just a word on this amendment. I think it deserves somewhat extended reference. I indorse every word of what my colleague from Missouri [Mr. in the neighborhood of 400,000,000 bushels of corn. A diminu- ELLIS has said in reference to it. No one can avoid sympathizing with the claims of the community, such as have been presented with reference to this town of Elwood. But this question of the protection of the banks of streams, navigable and nonnavigable, for the mere saving of abutting property, has been under consideration by the committee and by Congress for a number of years. We have at last established the policy that for all streams under the control of the Army engineers we would not recommend appropriations unless directly and immediately required in the interest of navigation. Now, it is not any desire to shut out the claims of any community or State that brings us to that conclusion. I want to say for the Committee on Rivers and Harbors that they are the best friends of the real improvement of harbors and rivers. What would happen if we threw the door wide open and let in all these extraneous matters of protection against floods and protection of banks against erosion? What would happen if we allowed undeserving claims to find a place in our bill? Why, there would be so large an amount in one of these measures, such extravagance, that the bill would become a public scandal. It would be a pork barrel, as it has been sometimes termed, and as it is sometimes termed even now.

Occasionally, I have no doubt, we make mistakes, and items are included here which should not be, but we are striving to follow certain general rules. The first to be observed is the promotion of navigation, and, I may add, with a preference for those channels and harbors where navigation already exists and increased facilities are required. We are seeking to frame our appropriation according to the prospective benefits which will acrue. We are seeking to rigidly exclude matters which do not belong to the promotion of navigation. Now, this in one. I do not want the members of the committee to omit to consider what would happen if we should consent to this item. It would mean that we must do the same on every navigable stream in the United States; and, indeed, there is no difference in principle in this regard between a navigable and a nonnavigable stream. It would mean that ultimately we must protect the banks and private property abutting on all streams in the United States, and in a very few years the provisions made for navigation would be entirely eclipsed by the much larger amounts required for the protection of property. It is for this reason that we object, and object strenuously, to this item.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. Scott].

The question being taken, the amendment of Mr. Scorr was rejected.

Mr. KENNEDY of Nebraska. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I do not rise to oppose any of the provisions in this bill. I am heartly in favor of river and harbor improvements, and I hope that in due time the gentlemen from Missouri and the gentlemen from Illinois will have their hearts gladdened by a deep waterway from the Lakes to the Gulf. My objection to the last paragraph read is not to what it does, but to what it does not do. We have a provision in this paragraph for $100,000 for the Missouri River from Kansas City to Sioux City. As a matter of fact, it ought to be $2,000,000. We have in the cities of Omaha and South Omaha a large amount of freight to handle. Last year our jobbing trade was $85,000,000. The aggregate value of the stock received at South Omaha was We handled at Omaha last year over 45,000,over $90,000,000. 000 bushels of grain, and we have for the reception and storage of grain an elevator capacity of 6,000,000 bushels. Our manufactures, including the output of the South Omaha packing houses, are about $200,000,000 per annum.

Mr. Chairman, we have the freight, and we have the Missouri River, and, notwithstanding all statements to the contrary, the Missouri River is more easily navigable to-day than it was in the early days when constantly used for freight transportation I base that statement not only upon my own knowledge, but upon the opinion of the engineers who are familiar with the river and who have had charge of that work. issue with some of the gentlemen with reference to the result of dredging the Missouri River, although I believe that the most effective method of dredging that river is by contracting the channel and letting the water do the work. That is a prac-tical plan. It is so practicable that it will be tried, and it will prove to be a success.

During the summer months we had pleasure boats on the Missouri plying to the north and to the south. We have organized in the city of Omaha a company which is now arranging to place on the river during the coming season boats and barges for the carrying of freight. When we have demonstrated that those boats and barges can ply on the river, that freight can be carried on the Missouri, we will be back here asking from you a liberal appropriation for river improvements, and will then be satisfied not with thousands, but with millions, to restore the Missouri to the map for commercial purposes,

Now just another thought.

[The time of Mr. Kennedy of Nebraska having expired, by unanimous consent his time was extended five minutes.]

Mr. KENNEDY of Nebraska. The question has been suggested in various forms on this floor, and in fact was asked me the other day by the distinguished chairman of the Rivers and Harbors Committee, why the Missouri and Mississippi rivers are not used to a larger extent for the transportation of freight. My answer to that question was then and is now that these rivers would have been used more largely for the transportation of freight had it not been for the common custom of railroads in paying rebates to the large shippers throughout the land. The large shippers in the cities of the United States have not been interested in the years gone by in reducing the rates; they have not been interested in cheap transportation; they have been interested solely in getting an advantage over their competitors. Large shippers, therefore, have had nothing to gain by opening up the rivers to navigation. The small shippers have not had the financial power or influence to do it.

I went up, Mr. Chairman, to the irrigation congress which was held in this city last December, and sat for nearly two days listening to the speeches and noting the proceedings. The large business interests of the land were there represented, urging liberal appropriations for rivers and harbors. I say to you and to this House that had it not been for the passage of the rate bill those powerful influences would not have been in that congress, and you would not now have behind this bill the united business interests of the country. If we should repeal the rate bill, passed at the last session, we would withdraw from this project of improving the rivers and harbors of the country the most potent influences behind it to-day.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I make these remarks because in that system of rebates I believe lie the most reasonable excuse and explanation for the fact that these rivers have not been more largely employed for transportation purposes. I believe that the future will justify me in the statement I make that, with rebates prohibited, the large shippers of the country bestir themselves to obtain not advantages over their legitimate competitors, but cheaper rates, which will work to their advan-tage and to the advantage of the whole country. [Applause.]

The pro forma amendment was withdrawn.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

Improving harbor at Oakland, Cal.: Continuing improvement, $68, 203: Provided, That the adopted project may be extended as recommended by the Board of Review on Rivers and Harbors in a report dated January 11, 1907, so as to include the following work: Extension of South Jetty, 500 feet; widening to 500 feet the channel 25 feet deep from San Francisco Bay to Fallon street; deepening to 25 feet the channel 300 feet wide from Fallon street to the tidal basin; deepening to 17 feet the channel 300 feet wide around the north side of the tidal basin to the tidal canal, and from the tidal canal along the Alameda shore to Tenth avenue: Provided further, That the Secretary of War may enter into a contract or contracts for such materials and work as may be necessary to complete said improvement as herein adopted, to be paid for as appropriations may from time to time be made by law, not to exceed in the aggregate $300,000, in addition to the amounts herein and heretofore appropriated or authorized for said harbor.

Mr. RURTON of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer the

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 77, after the word "avenue," in line 14, insert "axd any balance remaining on appropriations or authorizations heretofore made for the improvement of the harbor at Oakland may be applied to the project as so extended."

The amendment was considered, and agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Improving the waterway connecting Puget Sound with Lakes Union and Washington, Washington: For maintenance of improvement, $10,000; and the Secretary of War may make a survey and estimate of cost of said waterway or canal with one lock, with a view to the construction of the same, in conjunction with the county authorities of King County or other agency, of sufficient size to accommodate the largest commercial or naval vessels afloat; or, if deemed more advisable, with a view to the construction of a canal of less dimensions, and to submit dimensions and estimate of cost of same, together with a report upon what portion of said work will be done or contribution to be made by said county or other agency.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Cierk read as ioliows:

After the word "agency," in line 23, page 82 of House bill, add the following:

"And the provisions of the act approved June 11, 1906, authorizing James A. Moore, or his assigns, to construct a canal, with suitable timber lock, are hereby so modified as to permit the said James A. Moore, or his assigns, subject to the conditions and stipulations of the act, to excavate a channel 75 feet wide and 25 feet deep at mean low water from deep water in Puget Sound to deep water in Lake Washington, in lieu of constructing the canal and timber lock specified in the said act, the location of the said channel and work of excavation to be subject to the direction of the Secretary of War, and when completed and accepted by the Secretary of War the channel to be and remain a free public waterway of the United States."

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, just a word in explanation. The county of King, in which Seattle is located, has endeavored to cooperate with the General Government in the creation of a waterway from Puget Sound to Lake Union and Lake Washington. These are fresh-water lakes located at an elevation above the level of the sea, and a very large amount of anchorage would be afforded in each of them. the last session of this Congress an act was passed authorizing the construction by private parties of a wooden lock in the passageway between Puget Sound and Lake Union, with a view to providing a navigable passageway between the two. It has been decided that such construction is not best, and the request comes from the locality that the money which might have been used upon the wooden lock may be used for dredging, with the thought that the Government would cooperate in constructing a substantial structure of masonry in place of the wooden lock which was contemplated.

I desire it to be distinctly understood that this provision does not commit the Government to the construction of a lock and dam there. When I have said that, however, I should say that, so far as my own personal opinion or wish is concerned, I hope the time may come when the Government may cooperate in completing this waterway between the Sound and the lakes, because I recognize that this community has grown as rapidly as any in the United States; that its shipping is increasing enormously; that it has received only very small appropriations from the Government, and, last of all, that it has shown a disposition to do for itself in the way of cooperation and paying part of the expense.

by the gentleman from Ohio.

The question was taken; and the amendment was agreed to. Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I simply want to say this with reference to the amendment just adopted. As the chairman has stated, the people of King County and Seattle are very anxious about the construction of this canal. They are not only anxious to have it done, but they have been willing to contribute toward the construction of this work. They have donated the right of way in the first instance at a cost of $250,000. That right of way now in itself is worth over $1,000,000. Last session of Congress we passed a bill here granting to James A. Moore and his assigns permission to construct this canal with a wooden lock. The facts are in regard to that, that the county of King was to turn over to Mr. Moore $500,000 in bonds to assist him in the construction of that canal, and the people of King County actually voted those bonds four to one. When an official estimate was made, however, as to the cost of the lock, it was found that the lock would cost in itself $400,000 instead of $100,000, as Mr. Moore had estimated, so that it was found to be impossible for him to carry out the proposition. After Congress met at this session, after most of the bill had been framed, the people of King County came to the committee with the proposition for the Government to take up the proposition with their help. It was imossible, however, for the committee, under the principles it was following in the framing of the bill, to take a proposition on that would carry probably a million and a half upon the part of the Government. These people are ready and willing and have simply asked that they may be allowed to go on and spend $500,000 and possibly more in the dredging of a channel along this right of way. They recognize that it does not obligate the Government to take up this proposition, but they do feel that when they do that they will make such a showing in the construction of this canal with the increase in population and business that when we frame another river and harbor bill the Government will feel fully justified in taking on this work. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn.

The Clerk read as follows:

In all cases in which appropriations or authorizations have hereto-fore been made, or are herein made, for the completion of river and harbor works, and the amounts appropriated or authorized shall prove insufficient for completion, the Secretary of War may, in his discre-tion, on the recommendation of the Chief of Engineers, apply such amounts appropriated or authorized for the prosecution of such work.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I would call attention to the fact that we have passed three or four paragraphs that were passed without prejudice until the completion of the readsing of section 1. The first is on page 11, where I ask, as a substitute for lines 4 to 7, the adoption of the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read. I would say after consultation with the Chief of Engineers and his first assistant, with the gentlemen from New York, Mr. Waldo, Mr.

FITZGERALD, and Mr. Towne, this paragraph has been agreed upon.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 11, instead of lines 4 to 7, inclusive, insert the following: "Improving Bay Ridge and Red Hook channels in the harbor of New York: The Secretary of War is authorized, in his discretion, to prosecute the improvement in said channel with a view to obtaining, first, a depth of 35 feet, and subsequently increasing said depth to the full depth allowed in the adopted project, as the available depth in the entrance channel to said harbor shall require."

ment offered by the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I rise merely for the purpose of obtaining information. I do not envy my colleagues from New York for having made this agreeable arrangement looking to a 40-foot survey, but I desire to ask the chairman of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors whether the authorization for a survey to 40 feet, as apparently is contemplated by this amendment, was made before or after the policy of the committee was settled that there should be no surveys for work in anticipation of work appropriated for, but not completed?

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, if I may answer the question of the gentleman directly, I may say that this provision is not a survey at all; but to answer the spirit of his question, rather than the letter, I would say that the survey under which they are now at work in the New York Harbor was made in the month of December, 1898. There were half a dozen separate resolutions brought in. Under that resolution a report was made during that month giving estimates, respectively, for a channel 35 and 40 feet deep through what is now known as "Ambrose channel" to the sea. This provision inserted here is with a view to a limitation of the subsidiary project in New York Harbor, which was adopted to a depth of 40 feet in 1899. This looks toward a limitation of the depth until the deep channel out to the sea is completed. I take it that answers the gentleman's question. The gentleman wants, I understand, an explanation as to how that 40-foot channel for New York Harbor was adopted, and I shall be very glad to tell him.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I am not rising in any contentious spirit at all.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. Certainly not.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. But it is apparent, inasmuch as provision seems here to be made for an ultimate depth of 40 feet for a port along the Atlantic coast, that, a depth of more than 30 feet having been refused the Delaware, there is a disparity that may very easily be misunderstood by the lay mind. I am endeavoring to get information as to whether the authorization in this instance was made before the committee adopted the policy which has been explained to the House by the chairman of the committee.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. It was made in 1898-99-that ses-Further answering the gentleman's question, I think he will find that since the days of boats of even moderate draft there has always been a difference of 7 to 10 feet between the channels leading to New York and leading to Philadelphia. There have been exceptional years when Philadelphia would want more, but the general condition has been about that. have to say, further, that the House adopted a provision for the 35 feet only, and the Senate placed on the addition.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. They have a 35-foot channel

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. No; they have only a 32-foot channel by way of Sandy Hook.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I would like also to ask whether in the bill now drawing to a close there is provision made for any survey in anticipation of work appropriated for and not completed?

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. How do I understand the gentle-man's question—"work appropriated for and not completed?"

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. That is correct.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. I could not answer that question absolutely by saying "no" to it, but that is the general rule we have pursued.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I was led to believe, as the result of the discussion relative to the Delaware the other day, that there had been no other instance in which a survey had been permitted for work in advance of work appropriated for.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. I would say that there is no exception to that practice. There may be a case where work is so nearly finished, or different conditions have arisen, or where we find the larger project would be the cheaper in the long run, but the general principle remains.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Then, it can be fairly stated that there is no discrimination in favor of this port so far as the committee is concerned?

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. No; there is no discrimination.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I am looking to the future, as my colleagues from New York are, and am simply going back to the good old mother-taught suggestion, "If at first we do not succeed, try, try again." I have no objection to the amend-

The question was taken; and the amendment was agreed to.
Mr. BURTON of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, the next paragraph which was passed without prejudice was on page 20, lines 10 and 12, inclusive, and I desire to offer an amendment there.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.
The Clerk read as follows:

On page 20 strike out all of line 11 after the word "Pennsylvania;" also line 12, and insert in lieu thereof the following: "For the repair and construction of Dam No. 3 and for the completion of Dam No. 2, $235,000."

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. It should be said, Mr. Chairman, that this adds to the bill $35,000, an amount made necessary by a report which was received within a very few days and on which the information was not absolutely complete until after we commenced the consideration of this bill. I think that we should provide the additional sum as set forth in the amend-

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. Burton].

The question was taken; and the amendment was agreed to. Mr. BURTON of Ohio. The next is on page 69, line 5. yield to my colleague on the committee [Mr. LORIMER] to offer an amendment.

Mr. LORIMER. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. LORIMER] offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows

On page 69, line 5, strike out the words "for maintenance" and all of line 6 and insert in lieu thereof: "Continuing improvement and for maintenance, $200,000."

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I want to say in regard to this that my attention has been called to the project since the return of my colleague [Mr. LORIMER], who was detained by illness during the larger part of the time the River and Harbor Committee had the bill under consideration. I regard the amendment as a proper one, and trust the committee will sustain it.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, in this connection the improvement of the Chicago River by the General Government for years has been delayed in a way on account of the tunnels which were an obstruction to navigation there. Under the law that was passed several years ago progress has been made for the removal of those tunnels, and within the last three or four or five days, I think, the contract either has been signed or the matter has been arranged so that the final removal of the tunnels is now considered as a practically established fact within a short time. And I hope when that is accomplished that in addition to the sum that is appropriated here we may have the further attention of the committee, because what has stood in the way heretofore will now be out of the way.

by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. LORIMER].

The question was taken; and the amendment was agreed to. Mr. BURTON of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment as a substitute for the following paragraph—the one immediately following the one just now considered. This is an additional amount for which provision is made under continuing contract. It was not brought to the attention of the committee at the time the bill was framed.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 69, after the word "dollars," in line 9, strike out the period and insert a semicolon and "Provided, That the Secretary of War may enter into a contract or contracts for such materials and work as may be necessary to complete said project, to be paid for as appropriations may from time to time be made by law, not to exceed in the aggregate $170,000, exclusive of the amounts herein or heretofore appropriated."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amend-

The question was taken; and the amendment was agreed to. Mr. BURTON of Ohio. Now, Mr. Chairman, I desire to ask unanimous consent to recur to paragraph on pages 72 and 73 relating to the Mississippi River from the mouth of the Ohio River to and including the mouth of the Missouri River.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio for unanimous consent to recur? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. Now, Mr. Chairman, I do not wish to press this amendment, which is suggested by a letter received from the engineer in charge since this bill began to be considered, if there is any objection from the Members from that part of the river. I would like to inquire, first, in whose district is the town of Wittenberg, in Missouri?

Mr. KLEPPER. That must be off the map.
Mr. BURTON of Ohio. The gentleman says that is off the Then I will offer the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. Burton] offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 73, after line 5, insert "and the amount of $10,000, hereto-fore appropriated for Wittenberg Harbor, shall be made available for the general improvement of the river."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio.

The question was taken; and the amendment was agreed to. The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

Sec. 2. For preliminary examinations and surveys (other than those mentioned in section 1), contingencies, and for incidental repairs for which there is no special appropriation for rivers and harbors, $300,006: Provided, That no preliminary examination, survey, project, or estimate for new works other than those designated in this or some prior act or joint resolution shall be made: Provided further, That after the regular or formal reports made as required by law on any examination, survey, project, or work under way or proposed are submitted no supplemental or additional report or estimate shall be made unless ordered by a concurrent resolution of Congress. The Government shall not be deemed to have entered upon any project for the improvement of any waterway or harbor mentioned in this act until funds for the commencement of the proposed work shall have been actually appropriated by law: Provided further, That all expenses heretofore and hereafter incurred by the War Department for examinations, reports, inspections, superintendence, or any other action necessary in executing the provisions of the act of Congress approved June 11, 1906, entitled "An act to empower the Secretary of War, under certain restrictions, to authorize the construction, extension, and maintenance of wharves, piers, and other structures on lands underlying harbor areas and navigable streams and bodies of water in or surrounding Porto Rico and the islands adjacent thereto," shall be payable from funds herein and hereafter appropriated for examinations, surveys, and contingencies of rivers and harbors, the allotments for such expenses to be made by the Chief of Engineers.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order against that in order to make an inquiry of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. Burron]. What is the object in saying here that no preliminary examinations shall be made unless under some prior act or joint resolution? Of course

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. This is the case: That phraseology has been carried along from bill to bill. There is usually a small number of surveys or preliminary examinations ordered in prior resolutions or acts which have not yet been made.

Mr. MANN. This was the point that struck my mind: Of course this is merely a limitation on this appropriation where there can be no possible objection to it; but if it is in the enactment of permanent law, it attempts to say that Congress can not do something by act of Congress hereafter.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. I do not think that there will be any trouble because of that.

Mr. MANN. The same is true as to that part of the bill in reference to reports: "No supplemental or additional report or estimate shall be made unless ordered by a concurrent resolution of Congress." Now, of course, that could be put in the bill, but you could not prevent Congress passing an act saying this shall be.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. Certainly not.

Mr. MANN. Why do you say "unless ordered by Congress?" Mr. BURTON of Ohio. That is practically explained in the next clause, where it provides that surveys or estimates shall be ordered by concurrent resolution.

Mr. MANN. But suppose we should pass a joint resolution? Mr. BURTON of Ohio. The greater includes the less.

would order a survey.

Mr. MANN. I take it would be provided for, notwithstanding the fact that it would be in the teeth of the provision; but as you say that this is an old thing in the bill I do not know that it makes any difference.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. That form was adopted quite a period of time before I was on the committee, and partly out of respect for our predecessors we have retained it.

Mr. MANN. I commend to the gentleman hereafter the remodeling of the form as to that, because it is certainly very

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. It has worked very well, and the best test of legislation is that it is effective.

Mr. MANN. It will be effective until a case arises to test the question of its effectiveness. We can not tell whether legislation is effective or not until an occasion arises to test the legis-You have had no case to arise.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. There will be no trouble about that. Mr. MANN. This seems to require the War Department to construe which one of the courses they shall pursue, where there

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. They would read the two together. We have had no trouble with this.

Mr. MANN. I withdraw the point of order.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I move to strike out the last word. do this, Mr. Chairman, with the purpose of making a suggestion or two in regard to the grounds upon which general appropriations for the development of waterways have been supported here, from which I respectfully dissent. If I caught the drift of the argument, the proposition was that appropriations should be based upon the commerce or tonnage upon the particular waterway that was sought to be improved. In other words, the amount of appropriation should be measured by the existing tonnage upon the particular way to be improved. I think there can be no more erroneous proposition than that put forward as the underlying principle in the matter of appropriations for This is an old battle that has been fought here many years ago, and I am only going to point out one or two illustrations, first stating, however, my own proposition. If anybody who has intelligently studied the situation believes that a great commerce will grow up by reason of the improvement the measure of appropriation ought to be the measure of benefits that are to come in the future and by no means limited or measured by the conditions in the past or present.

Now, I have two illustrations in my own State. When I was first a member of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors the port of Black River and the port of Ashtabula had a depth of water of about 7 to 9 feet, and when estimates were made and the attempt was made to improve those harbors by dredging to a greater depth we were met exactly with this antiquated argument, and I was challenged over and over again on this floor with the question, "What is the commerce of Black River?" Well, there was practically no commerce at all, and the same was in a measure true of Ashtabula. But we plodded ahead with the prospect of the development of commerce at those two At last we succeeded in getting estimates and appropriations, and we have now a channel of something like 18 or 19 feet at each one of those ports, and the result of it is that the harbor of Ashtabula handles more of the lake trade from the upper lakes by far than the great harbor of Cleveland does.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. Will the gentleman permit an interruption?

Mr. GROSVENOR. Certainly.
Mr. BURTON of Ohio. The commerce of Cleveland is still considerably larger than that of Ashtabula, by the proportion of about 9 to 12

Mr. GROSVENOR. Now, the gentleman does not hear what I say, and makes a statement that does not answer my statement. The commerce of Ashtabula is with the upper of the main chain of lakes. That is what I said and what I say. It has a far greater amount of commerce with Duluth and the upper lakes than does Cleveland. Cleveland has more general commerce, that is doubtless true.

But take this revolution that has taken place at Black

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.
Mr. GROSVENOR. I would like to finish the sentence. I ask for two minutes more time.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. GROSVENOR. There was a village, and now it is a place of 20,000 inhabitants. Where there was a country village there are some of the largest iron and steel manufactories in the world, and a commerce that is almost equal, so far as iron and steel is concerned, to any other harbor in the whole chain of the upper lakes.

So I say that there must be some estimation, something that brings the judgment of Congress to bear upon the future of a project, or you will waste your time in many of the appropria-I am not complaining about anything in this bill, I want that to be distinctly understood; but I am talking of the practice about which many hours of discussion were had in the earlier days of my experience in Congress. [Applause.]

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, just a word. Of course the committee does not, in making up this bill, consider alone the present tonnage. Indeed tonnage is not altogether a conclusive test, because the value of the freight carried, and the number of passengers, etc., must be taken into account. But I will state to my colleague that after all the best test is existing commerce, in connection with which we must consider prospective benefits in the way of commerce to be developed in the future. It would seem to me that the principle he advocates would cause us to leave the solid ground of reality and disregard existing conditions. We would be giving our attention to conjectures about what might result in the future. That certainly would not be a safe principle.

Mr. Chairman, the so-called "Gallinger shipsubsidy bill" is dead-dead as a door nail-and now lies a corpse in the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries, with no one to do it honor.

Public opinion killed it, but I think I contributed somewhat to its early demise by the speech I made in this House on Thursday, April 26, 1906, when I said in regard to it:

Ship subsidies do not build ships—they create ocean-trading monopolies. Ship subsidies will not give workmen employment in American shipyards—the money will simply go into the capacious pockets of the plutocratic beneficiaries of the shipping trust. Every scheme of this kind simply permits respectable corruption and benefits the few at the expense of the many. The principle of ship subsidies is inherently wrong and absolutely indefensible—it is unrepublican, undemocratic, and un-American—and no man who understands the question can justify the steal in the face of the facts. If we had continued the policy of the fathers we would to-day be the greatest maritime nation in the world, and our flag would be on every sea, and our ships would be carrying the commerce not alone of our own country, but perhaps half of that of all the other great nations of the world.

Now, Mr. Chairman, in order that the record regarding the legislation proposed to restore the American merchant marine may be complete, I want to send to the Clerk's desk and have read in my time the so-called "Gallinger ship-subsidy bill" as it passed the Senate, and as it died in the committee of the House.

The Clerk read as follows:

An act to promote the national defense, to create a naval reserve, to establish American ocean mail lines to foreign markets, and to promote commerce.

An act to promote the national defense, to create a naval reserve, to establish American ocean mail lines to foreign markets, and to to establish American ocean mail lines to foreign markets, and to the line of the line of

(c) A vessel while exclusively employed in carrying between foreign ports.

(c) A vessel for a voyage extending only to a foreign port less than 150 nautical miles from her last port of departure in the United States or from a foreign port less than 150 nautical miles from her first port of arrival in the United States.

Sections 1 and 2 of an act approved April 15, 1904, entitled "An act to regulate shipping in trade between perts of the United States and ports or places in the Philippine Archipelago, and for other purposes," shall not take effect until July 1, 1909, and until that date a vessel of the United States employed in trade between the United States and the Philippines shall receive for the period of its employment in such trade an additional subvention of 30 per cent of the rates provided in this section. After that date a vessel of the United States so engaged shall receive no subvention under this section.

A vessel receiving a subvention under this section shall not receive any other subvention, subsidy, or bounty from the Treasury of the United States.

A vessel receiving a subvention under this section shall not receive any other subvention, subsidy, or bounty from the Treasury of the United States.

SEC. 3. That before receiving any subvention under the provisions of section 2 of this act the owner or owners of any vessel shall contract, in writing, with sufficient sureties, with the Secretary of Commerce and Labor to fulfill each and all of the following obligations:

First. That said vessel may be taken and used by the United States, for the national defense or for any public purpose, at any time, upon payment to the owner or owners of the fair actual value of the same at the time of the taking, or a fair rate of hire to be agreed upon. And if there shall be a disagreement as to such fair actual value or fair rate of hire between the United States and the owner or owners of such vessel, the United States is hereby authorized and empowered to take the vessel at once, leaving the fair actual value or fair rate of hire be determined thereafter by two impartial appraisers, one to be appointed by each of said parties, they to select a third, who shall act in such appraisement in case the two shall fail to agree and the provisions of this subdivision shall be embodied in every contract between the vessel owner or owners and the United States.

Second. That said vessel shall carry, free of charge, the mails of the United States, when the Postmaster-General shall so require, for the whole of any part of a voyage for which subvention shall be claimed. Third. That until July 1, 1912, upon each departure of said vessel from the United States at least one-sixth, and after July 1, 1912, one-fourth of the crew shall be clizens of the United States, or men who have had two years or more experience on deck at sea or on the Great Lakes.

Fourth. That a vessel employed in the foreign trade shall maintain, during the period so employed, at least class A1 if a steam vessel and at least class A1 if a sail vessel, as such classes are now established by either the Record of Amer by either the Record of American and Foreign Shipping or the United States Standard Owners, Builders, and Underwriters' Association, or equivalent classification in any register of shipping of at least equal merit.

Fifth. That all ordinary repair or overhauling of said vessel shall be made in the United States, except in cases where dry docking is necessary and no American dry dock of sufficient capacity shall be within a distance of 500 miles of the location of the ship when the repairs shall be needed.

Sixth. A vessel shall not be entitled to the subvention above provided for, unless during the period of employment in the foreign trade or deep-sea fisheries the following proportions of the crew of the vessel after the dates specified shall have been enrolled in the naval reserve: After July 1, 1917, one-fourth: Provided, That if the foreign path of the July 1, 1917, one-fourth: Provided, That if the foreign port with reasonable effort, as certified by the consul, other persons may be substituted until the first return of said vessel to the United States, without forfeiture of the subvention.

Sec. 4. That the contracts provided for in section 3 shall be for a period of one year, and shall be renewed from time to time. At the expiration of each annual contract the owner of the vessel shall be required to prove to the satisfaction of the Secretary of Commerce and Labor, in such manner as the said Secretary shall prescribe, that its obligations, each and all, have been satisfactorily complied with. The Secretary of Commerce and Labor shall thereupon certify to the Secretary of Commerce and Labor shall thereupon certify to the Secretary of Commerce and Labor shall thereupon certify to the Secretary of Commerce and Labor shall thereupon certify to the Secretary be entitled in fulfillment of said contract and of the provisions of this act, and the Secretary of the Treasury upon proper audit shall thereupon pay the subvention due.

Third. From a port of the Atlantic coast of the United States to South Africa, on steamships of the United States of not less than 12 knots speed, for a monthly service at a maximum compensation not exceeding $187,500 a year, or for a fortnightly service at a maximum compensation not exceeding $375,000 a year.

Fourth. From a port of the United States on the Gulf of Mexico to Brazil, on steamships of the United States on the Gulf of Mexico to Brazil, on steamships of the United States on to less than 12 knots speed, for a monthly service at a maximum compensation not exceeding $137,500 a year, or for a fortnightly service at a maximum compensation not exceeding $137,500 a year, or for a fortnightly service at a maximum compensation not exceeding $125,000 a year.

Fifth. From a port of the United States on the Atlantic coast south of Cape Hatteras and from a port on the Gulf of Mexico to Cuba, on steamships of the United States of not less than 14 knots speed, for a weekly service, at a maximum compensation not exceeding $125,000 a year.

Sixth. From each of two ports of the United States on the Gulf of Mexico and from New Orleans to Central America and to the port of Cristobal on the Isthmus of Panama, on steamships of the United States of not less than 12 knots speed, for a weekly service at a maximum compensation not exceeding $75,000 a year.

Seventh. From a port of the United States on the Gulf of Mexico to Mexico, on steamships of the United States of not less than 12 knots speed, for a weekly service at a maximum compensation not exceeding $75,000 a year.

Eighth. From a port of the Pacific coast of the United States via Hawaii to Japan, China, and the Philippines, on steamships of the United States of not less than 16 knots speed, for a monthly service at a maximum compensation not exceeding $800,000 a year, or for a for on the States of not less than 10 knots speed, for a monthly service at a maximum compensation not exceeding $300,000 a year, or for a fortnightly service at a maximum compensation not exceeding $600,000 a year.

Ninth. From each of two ports, namely, Puget Sound and the Columbia River, of the North Pacific coast of the United States of not less than 13 knots speed, for a monthly service at a maximum compensation not exceeding $210,000 a year, or for a fortnightly service at a maximum compensation not exceeding $20,000 a year.

Tenth. From a port of the Pacific coast of the United States via Hawaii and the Samoan Islands to Australasia, on steamships of the United States of not less than 16 knots speed, for a service once in three weeks at a maximum compensation not exceeding $217,000 a year in addition to the compensation now provided pursuant to contract under the act of March 3, 1891, entitled "An act to provide for ocean mail service between the United States and foreign ports, and to promote commerce."

Eleventh. From a port of the Pacific coast of the United States to Mexico, Central America, and Port La Boca on the Isthmus of Panama, on steamships of the United States of not less than 12 knots speed, for a pear: Provided, That the requirements of this section as to the rate of speed shall be deemed to be complied with if said rates are developed during a trial of four hours' continuous steaming at sea in ordinary weather in water of sufficient depth to make the test a fair and just one, and if the vessels are maintained in a condition to develop such speed at any time while at sea in ordinary weather. This trial shall be made under the direction and supervision of a board of naval efficers which the Secretary of the Navy shall appoint upon the application of the owner or owners of the vessel to be tested.

Sec. 7. That all contracts hereafter made pursuant to the act of March 3, 1891, before mentioned, or pursuant to sections 5 and 6 of this act, shall provide that on each voyage the following proportion return of said vessel to the United States, without forfeiture of the compensation.

SEC. S. That on proof to the satisfaction of the Commissioner of Navigation that a vessel of the United States has on any foreign voyage carried a boy or boys, a citizen or citizens of the United States, under 21 years of age, suitably trained during that voyage in steamship or engineering, in the proportion of one for such vessel, and in addition one for each 1,000 tons of her net registering tonnage, there shall be paid to the owner or owners of the vessel, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, an allowance equivalent to 80 per cent of the tonnage duties paid in respect of the entry in the United States of that vessel from that voyage: Provided, That such payment shall not be made after July 1, 1908, except in respect of any boy who is enrolled as seaman, third class, in the Naval Reserve, or is an apprentice indentured in accordance with law.

SEC. 9. That this act shall take effect on July 1, 1906.

SEC. 10. That Congress reserves the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act, in whole or in part, whenever in its judgment the public interest shall so require, without, however, impairing in any wise the obligation of any specific contract then in force which shall have been entered into under the provisions of sections 2, 3, 5, and 6 of this act.

Mr. SULZER. Now let us see for a moment just what this

Mr. SULZER. Now let us see for a moment just what this so-called "Gallinger ship-subsidy bill"—the bric-a-brac work of the Merchant Marine Commission—attempted to do, so that we will understand what we are considering. I want to read the subsidy part of it again:

the subsidy part of it again:

That in the interest of the national defense and for the performance of the public services hereinafter specified, after July 1, 1907, the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to pay, subject to the provisions of this act, out of any money in the Treasury, to be annually appropriated therefor upon estimates to be annually submitted to Congress in the Book of Estimates, to the owner or owners of any steam vessel of over 1,000 gross tons, and of any sail vessel of over 200 gross tons, and fishing vessel of over 20 gross tons hereafter built and registered in the United States or now duly registered by a clitzen or citizens of the United States (including as such citizens any corporation created under the laws of the United States or any of the States thereof), engaged exclusively as a common carrier for the service of the public, subventions (that is, subsidies; they both mean the same thing) as hereinafter provided—that is to say, (a) the sum of $5 per gross registered ton for each vessel which has been engaged in the foreign trade by sea or the deep-sea fisheries for a period of twelve months, including time necessarily consumed in receiving or discharging cargo, or not to exceed two months in making annual or extraordinary repairs; (b) the sum of $4 per gross registered ton for each vessel which during any twelve consecutive months has been engaged in the foreign trade by sea or the deep-sea fisheries for a period of nine months or over, but less than twelve months, including the time necessarily consumed in receiving or discharging cargo or not to exceed one month in making extraordinary repairs; (c) the sum of $2.50 per gross registered ton for each vessel which during any twelve consecutive months has been engaged in the foreign trade by sea or the deep-sea fisheries for a period of six months or over, but less than nine months, including time necessarily consumed in receiving or discharging cargo or not to exceed one month in making extraordinary repairs.

This is the salient subsidy feature of the Gallinger bill and

This is the salient subsidy feature of the Gallinger bill, and it is all I desire to read to the House at the present time for the purpose of this discussion.

Mr. Chairman, in place of the Gallinger bill the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR] and his colleagues on the committee struck out all of the Gallinger bill and inserted in its place a new subsidy by way of amendment. This new ship-subsidy new subsidy by way of amendment. This new snip-subsidy proposition is the same old foe of the people. It is the same old effort to get something from all the people for somebody for nothing. It has been pending in either one branch or the other of the Congress, in one form or another, for the last ten years. At one time it was the Hanna-Payne ship-subsidy bill, and Senator Hanna succeeded in passing it through the Senate, only to have it ignomificusty defeated in the House of Representatives. In another Congress Senator Hanna did his very best to pass it again through the Senate, but failed, and in this session of Congress we have the old foe with a new face in the Grosvenor new ship-subsidy bill, reported by the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries at the beginning of this session of Congress.

This new ship-subsidy bill differs but little in principle from its predecessors, and its fate should be the same. It is essentially a subsidy bill, and by subsidy I mean that the Government is compelled by law to take a part of its money, paid in taxes by all the people for the support of the Government, and give the money to a special interest to aid that interest in its special line of business. This is the scheme in a putchell and This is the scheme in a nutshell, and any line of business. policy of this character is inherently wrong in principle, constitutionally indefensible, and can not be justified by any theory of our system of government. Subsidies are monarchical and not republican; they have no place in a government of the people and by the people.

The Gallinger ship-subsidy bill was cleverly manipulated through the Senate on the 14th day of February last year by a vote of 38 to 27. Not a Democratic Senator, I am glad to voted for the bill, and to their eternal fame be it said that five Republican Senators voted against it. These Republican Senators, in my opinion, are entitled to the commendation of the people, and I take great pleasure in giving their names. They were: Messrs. Burkett, Dolliver, La Follette, Spooner, and WARNER. The American people should remember these

Now, Mr. Chairman, I want to put in the Record the new ship-subsidy bill, which is a substitute for the Gallinger bill, and is proposed by the gentleman from Ohio and his colleagues on the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries as a remedy for our shipping evils, and I send the same to the Clerk's desk and ask to have it read in my time.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. SULZER. The amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio to the so-called "Gallinger ship-subsidy bill" will not cure the evils of which the people complain, and especially will it not aid those engaged in the shipping industry. It is only an entering wedge, and those most conversant with the subject are more opposed to the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio than they are to the original Gallinger ship-subsidy bill.

It is not my purpose to-day, Mr. Chairman, to discuss at length the cause of the decline of our deep-sea carrying trade. or my own views, if I could have my way in the matter, concerning the speedlest remedy to restore our merchant marine. I have not the time at my disposal to do so, even if I wanted I have not the time at my disposal to do so, even if I wanted to go into an exhaustive examination of the intricate question. I want to speak to the House at this time briefly on this shipsubsidy question and frankly point out the evils incident to subsidies and sure to follow their adoption.

My position regarding this subject I believe is well known, but I want to say again to the Members of this House that I have always been, am now, and always hope to be opposed to every effort to place upon the statute books of our country a ship-subsidy law, I have given considerable study to this question and I think I know something about it. I agree substantially with the gentleman from Ohio regarding the deplorable condition of our merchant marine, but I differ with him absolutely respecting the cause of the decline of our over-seas carrying trade; and we are as far apart as the poles respecting the best and most practical remedy for the rehabilitation of our shipping industries and the carrying of our ocean trade in American ships, built by American workmen, manned by American sailors, and flying the American flag.

Mr. Chairman, it is a fact, and a most deplorable fact, and every man who has investigated the subject knows it, that we have less registered tonnage for ocean carrying trade to-day than we had one hundred years ago. In 1806 the United States, with a population of less than 7,000,000 inhabitants, owned more registered tonnage for ocean carrying trade than the United States in 1906, with a population of over 85,000,000. The American tonnage in 1806 was over 900,000, and it is now less than 800,000, and, what is worse still, it showed an actual decrease of more than 6,000 tons last year. In 1806 American ships, flying the American flag and manned by American sailors, carried over 90 per cent of our deep-sea trade and a great part of that of all the countries of Europe. To-day we carry very little of our own trade and practically none of other countries, notwithstanding the fact that we should be the foremost maritime power in the world. More than nine-tenths of our once great and powerful deep-sea fleet has vanished, and not one new keel for an ocean-going ship is being laid to-day on either our Atlantic or Pacific coast, while the vessels of foreign nations throng our ports and monopolize more than nine-tenths of all our import and export commerce.

In 1806 over 92 per cent of our export and import trade was carried in American bottoms; in 1906 less than 8 per cent of our imports and exports are carried in American ships. The United States pays to the owners of foreign deep-sea vessels for conveying our freights and passengers over $200,000,000 a year, and much of this vast sum of money goes to the owners of foreign steamers which are regularly enrolled on the merchant cruiser lists of European governments, manned by naval reserve officers and sailors, and available for immediate service against us in case of war. The British Empire has 14,800,000 tons of merchant shipping; Germany has 4,960,000 tons; France, 1,680,000; Norway, 1,460,000, and Italy, 1,280,000. The larger part of all these great deep-sea fleets is engaged in the ocean carrying trade, but the Government of the United States, which produces and exports more merchandise than any other nation on earth, has a fleet registry of deep-sea commerce of less than

I agree with the gentleman from Ohio that this statement of the facts exhibits a most deplorable condition of our merchant marine affairs, but I say to him, and I say to the country, that it is all our own fault, and due entirely to our own shortsighted maritime policy, and especially to our failure to enact proper navigation legislation.

The gentleman from Ohio seeks to remedy the situation by ship subsidies, and hence earnestly favors and eloquently advocates this new ship-subsidy bill, which is no remedy at all, but a mere temporary makeshift to rob the many for the benefit of the few, by taking money out of the pockets of the taxpayers generally and giving it to a few favored individuals. I am opposed to this subsidy policy. The taxpayers, when they understand it, will never consent to it. This new bill, a copy of which I shall place in the record, is a subsidy bill pure and simple, and at the very best is only a temporary expedient, and no one who understands this subject believes for a single moment that it will ever accomplish what its advocates so vociferously claim. A subsidy is a bounty, a bonus, a gratuity, and it never has succeeded, and it never will succeed, in accomplishing the purpose desired. All history proves it conclusively. Wherever and whenever it has been tried it has failed. In my opinion, if this new subsidy bill should pass as it is to-day it would not restore our American merchant marine or aid materially our shipbuilding industries. It is a waste of time to talk about ship subsidies, and I believe every honest American is absolutely opposed to them. We might just as well pass a bill to pay a subsidy to every man who grows a bushel of wheat, or a barrel of potatoes, or a bale of cotton, or who makes a wagon, or builds a locomotive, as to pay a subsidy to a man who builds a ship or sails a vessel.

The taxpayers of our country, burdened now almost beyond endurance, are opposed to ship subsidies. They are opposed to this new Grosvenor gift bill. They say no private business interests should be aided by direct grants from the Treasury. Ship subsidies are subversive of the eternal principles of justice and equality, contrary to the theory of our free institutions, of doubtful expediency, and at war with the spirit of the Constitution. Congress has no power to subsidize any trade or any calling or any business on land or sea at the expense of the taxpavers of our country.

But. Mr. Chairman, in my opinion, this new subsidy bill will not materially benefit our shipbuilding industries, and of course if it will not benefit the shipping industries of the country, no new ships will be built, and American tonnage on the high seas will not be increased, and only the ships now in commission will get the benefits of the subsidies. This being so, this new ship-subsidy bill, giving away from four to six millions of dollars a year, will benefit no shipowners except the American shipping trust, the new England fishing smacks, and perhaps a few vessels on the Pacific Ocean.

Mr. Chairman, the people who are clamoring the loudest for the ship-subsidy bill are the bounty beggars who will get the subsidies; but so far as I have been able to find out, I have heard no great demand from the honest folk of the country in favor of this iniquitous measure to take money out of the Treasury of the people and pay it over to the American shipping trust in order that it may get additional gratuities.

It seems to me, sir, that this is an inopportune time to ask for ship subsidies when the people all over the country are de-

It seems to me, sir, that this is an inopportune time to ask for ship subsidies when the people all over the country are demanding a revision of the tariff, especially of those tax schedules which shelter monopoly and give protection to the trusts that sell their manufactured wares cheaper abroad than they do at home. But it seems that the chief argument of these ship-subsidy schemers, reduced to its simplest form and last analysis, amounts to about this: As all other monopolies are protected, therefore the shipping monopoly must be protected; as all other trusts are licensed to rob the many for the benefit of the few, therefore the shipping trust must have an opportunity to pilfer the people and get its share of the spoils. The plea, however, seems to come at a very unfortunate time, because from one end of the land to the other the people are demanding not only the prosecution of the criminal trusts, but the revision of all protective tariff taxes that aid and abet and shelter monopoly.

But the advocates and supporters of this ship-subsidy iniquity, by which all the people of the country are to be compelled to contribute a few millions of dollars a year to the American shipping trust, forget the history of the past and are reckless as to the consequences of the future. They seem to forget that conse-quences are unpitying, and that there is no cause without an effect. Their contention reminds one a good deal of a Chinese almanac in which every other day is labeled, "This is a lucky day to pay taxes." But these ship-subsidy grafters go even day to pay taxes." But these ship-subsidy grafters go even further, and write in their selfish almanac that every day is a lucky day to pay subsidies. If foreign governments grant subsidies, they say we should grant subsidies; and if foreign governments do not grant subsidies, they say that is the very reason we should grant subsidies. If foreign steamship owners raise the price of ocean freight rates, they get up in Congress and demand subsidies. If foreign steamship owners reduce ocean freight rates, they also get up in Congress and demand subsidies. Every wind that blows, in their opinion, evidently blows in favor of the Government giving the American shipping trust subsidies. But I am satisfied that the farmers and the toilers of our country, the men who pay the taxes, understand this subsidy question and are not in favor of putting their hands in their pockets and contributing gratuities to the extent of millions of dollars a year to any shipping trust or to any trustowned steamship line.

Mr. Chairman, I have always been, and always expect to be, a sincere friend of our shipping industries and an enthusiastic advocate of just and proper and honest legislation that will build up and restore our merchant marine. I believe every true American desires the supremacy of American ships in our overseas carrying trade, but I believe they prefer it along the lines of tonnage taxes, and not by subsidies. They see no necessity of taking money out of the Treasury and paying it to the present trust owners of ships for doing what they are already doing; and those most conversant with the subject even go so far as to declare that this new ship-subsidy scheme, if enacted into law, will not lay a new keel in any American shipyard, or secure an additional ton of freight of our over-seas commerce. Practically every dollar granted will go to the ships now affoat owned by the shipping trust.

Ship subsidies do not build ships—they create ocean-trading monopolies. Ship subsidies will not give workmen employment in American shipyards—the money will simply go into the capacious pockets of the plutocratic beneficiaries of the shipping trust. Every scheme of this kind simply permits respectable corruption and benefits the few at the expense of the many. The principle of ship subsidies is inherently wrong and absolutely indefensible—it is unrepublican, undemocratic, and un-

American, and no man who understands the question can justify the steal in the face of the facts. If the Congress should pass this pilfering, new ship-subsidy bill, I believe the people will demand its repeal in less than five years, but I hope the wisdom of this House will never permit this iniquitous bill to pass.

I am now, always have been, and always will be a friend of the American merchant marine. I long for the coming of the day when American ships will be on every sea, and our flag gloriously floating on the breeze in every port. I am willing to go as far as any man in this country to legislate for the restoration of the American merchant marine to all its former glory, and to secure for the American people their just share of the over-seas carrying trade of the world.

I know, and every man who has investigated this subject knows, that our loss of deep-sea commerce is due entirely to our own iniquitous legislation and short-sighted policies. the American Congress would legislate intelligently regarding this subject, we could restore our merchant marine and secure nine-tenths of all our commerce on the high seas, exports and imports, without a ship subsidy, or without taking a single imports, without a ship subsidy, or without taking a single dollar from the pockets of the taxpayers to give subsidies to favored shipowners and shipbuilders. This whole subject is a very simple matter when reduced to an intelligent business proposition. We do not need to take a dollar out of the pockets of the taxpayers, or out of the Treasury of the United States, to revive our shipbuilding industries or restore our merchant marine. All we need to do is to legislate intelligently, repeat the injunitous laws against our deep-see shipping now on our the iniquitous laws against our deep-sea shipping now on our statute books, put in their place laws similar to the navigation laws that were enacted by the early statesmen of the country laws that built up our merchant marine in those historic dayslaws that placed our flag on the high seas and gave us ninetenths of our entire over-seas carrying trade. It is a simple matter, and would be done but for the influence of special interests and the tenacious power of monopoly.

Now, sir, I have introduced in several Congresses bills to accomplish this—not subsidy bills, not bills that rob the many for the benefit of the few—not bills that take money out of the pockets of the taxpayers generally and hand the money over specifically to special interests—but bills along intelligent businesslike lines, and in accordance with the policy of the fathers of the Republic and the framers of our Constitution who understood this subject of over-seas shipping trade and commerce and legislated accordingly, and the United States had in those days the finest merchant marine the world had ever seen. we had continued the policy of the fathers, we would to-day be the greatest maritime nation in the world and our flag would be on every sea, and our ships would be carrying the commerce not alone of our own country, but perhaps half of that of all the other great nations of the world.

I introduced at the beginning of this Congress a bill to accomplish this (H. R. 8767), but it has been sleeping the sleep that never awakes in the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries. It will never come out. It will never be reported, simply because it is an honest bill and not a subsidy bill, because it does not rob the many for the benefit of the few, because it will accomplish practically all the people of the country desire—the building up of our merchant marine upon legitimate lines, in a business way, and the restoration of the American flag to the high seas. My bill is a tonnage-tax bill along discriminating lines in favor of American-built ships and against foreign-built ships— and the foreigner pays the tonnage tax. In other words, the essential difference between my ship tonnage-tax bill and the new ship-subsidy bill is that the new subsidy bill compels the American people to give a bonus, or a subsidy, or a subventionand they are all the same—to the American shipowner, while my bill makes the foreign shipowner pay an additional tonnage if his vessel brings merchandise from countries not under its government. This bill of mine is a most comprehensive measure, covering every phase of this question, and in the judgment of those who know most about the matter it would effectually solve the problem without taking a single dollar from the pockets of the taxpayers of our country. I send this bill of mine to the Clerk's desk and ask to have it read in my time. I want the bill to go into the RECORD, so that a comparison with the other bills can be made and those interested in this subject can read it and judge for themselves.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill to regulate commerce with foreign nations; to make preference for the use of American freighting vessels; to extend the postal serv-ice by American steamships, and to promote American trade.

PART 3. MAIL CARRIAGE.

Sec. 10. That the postal act, approved March 3, 1891, be, and it is hereby, amended to provide and to read as follows:

Clause 1. The Postmaster-General shall, as often as once in each year, advertise for informal proposals for the carriage of mails by sea in American vessels between such ports of our own and other countries as to exporters may seem advantageous. The advertisements shall be inserted four times weekly in a paper printed in Boston, New York, Philadelphia, Baltimore, New Orleans, Galveston, Norfolk, Charleston, Savannah, Mobile, San Francisco, Portland, and Seattle, describing the service as that of mail and naval vessels adapted to promote the postal, commercial, and naval interests of the United States, and to subserve those of their owners as well. Proposers will state the size and speed of vessels, number of trips yearly, remuneration required, time when service could be begun, and such other particulars as may seem useful for the Government to consider.

Clause 2. Within one month after receipt of informal proposals the Secretary of the Navy and the Postmaster-General shall together consider their contents, the wants of the Navy, and the needs of the Post-Office, and fix upon a schedule of requirements that will satisfy both services. The Secretary of the Navy will control the plans for the vessels and the Postmaster-General will decide upon the postal programme, and the two together shall advertise formally to let contracts for the running of the vessels required. Such advertisements shall be inserted in the same papers that called for informal proposals four times weekly, describing the route, the character of the vessels, the size and speed, the number of trips yearly, the times of sailing, and the time when the service shall begin. The letting of such contracts shall be the same as prescribed by law for the letting of inland mall contracts so far as shall be applicable to vessels. Every contract m without express consent of Congress; and in cases of need, when private enterprise fails to undertake or carry on the service at reasonable or lawful rates of remuneration, the Secretary of the Navy shall have authority, and it shall be his duty to furnish suitable vessels of the Navy in which to send mails foreign or bring them home, until the further order of Congress.

Clause 4. That all vessels in the postal service and hereafter built for it shall be prepared to receive arms for immediate use as cruisers, scouts, or transports in time of war; and in future their plans and specifications shall be agreed upon by and between the owners and the Secretary of the Navy, the strength and stability to be sufficient to carry armament most useful in naval service, and the materials of hull army and the materials of hull army and the materials of hull army and the materials of hull given by American inspection and rating. And all such vessels hereafter built shall be constructed under the inspection of a naval officer detailed by the Secretary of the Navy, to whom he will report in writing the progress made monthly, whether or not the contract is being well performed, and when the trial trip may be made; and no vessel not approved by the Secretary as fulfilling the contract shall be accepted for the service.

Clause 5. The compensation to be agreed upon and paid for such service as may be contracted for under this act shall be reasonable and as low as responsible bidders will perform the same, having regard to the encouragement to vessels provided by this act, to the commercial circumstances in each case, and to the rate of compensation for similar service to be made at the end of each round voyage. If the contract shall fail to be fulfilled for six months, the President may declare it forfelted, and thereupon the route shall be readvertised; payment for service to be made at the end of each round voyage. If the contract shall fail to be fulfilled for six months, the President may declare it forfelted, and thereupon t

PART 4. GENERAL PROVISIONS.

Sec. 11. That marine underwriters or insurance companies belonging abroad, in person or through agencies in the ports of the United States, may issue policies, in conformity with State regulations, on shipments of goods, wares, and merchandise to be exported, but any discrimination made by them or their agents in the clauses of policies, in the premium rates, or effected through inspection of hulls or otherwise, which shall tend to favor the employment of foreign vessels, or tend to distavor the engagement of vessels of the United States, shall be deemed a misdemeanor, punishable by a fine as a penalty in a district court of the United States. Said fine for the first offense shall not exceed $5,000 nor be less than $3,000; for a second offense said fine shall not be less than $10,000, and for the third offense and each one afterwards said fine shall be not less than $15,000 nor more than $25,000 and suits shall be prosecuted by the attorney of the court aforesaid for each and every violation brought to his notice. In any such suit it shall be no defense that the orders or directions of any person, or the rules and regulations of any association of underwriters, shipowners, merchants, marine surveyors, or their agents, not citizens of the United States, or that the inspection or classification of any vessel by any person, society, or authority whatsoever, can be claimed to justify the discrimination that may have been the subject of complaint. In a time of peace it shall not be lawful for any officer of the Government to receive tenders of service to be performed by vessels not of the United States.

Sec. 12. That on and after the passage of this act it shall be lawful for the space of thirty months, but no longer, for any bona fide citizen, citizens, or domestic corporation engaged in, or intending immediately to engage in, the carriage of merchandise, mails, or passengers in the foreign trade of the of distress.

SEC. 13. That where it may become known to the collector that rebates of freight are paid in the commerce of any port of the United States, either by citizens or foreigners, he shall bring the facts to the attention of the United States district attorney, who shall bring sult to break up the practice. And for the prevention of frauds under this act, in indirect voyaging, foreign vessels not built in the country of registry shall undergo a probation of three years before being adjudged by the collector as belonging in good faith to the country of registration. Sec. 14. That, coincident with the passage and approval of this act, section 4136 of the Revised Statutes of the United States shall stand repenled, and it shall not be lawful longer for any officer of the Government to issue a register, enrollment, or license for any vessel built abroad except such as have been captured in war and condemned as prize, and such as have been forfeited for a violation of the laws and bought at public sale, or admitted by an act.

Sec. 15. That the regular duties of tonnage computed on the gross admeasurement shall be paid alke by American and foreign vessels on each and every arrival when entry of vessel is made. Entrance or passenger tax shall be paid when permit is given for the landing of passengers from vessels not of the United States brought from countries to which said vessels do not belong. All additional tonnage duties and the light and race tax to be paid before lading permit is issued, but if loading be delayed, then, at latest, at the end of two months from date or entrance. American vessels carrying crews of which one-eighth the number are citizens or owe allegiance to the United States shall have rebate of tonnage tax to the extent of 20 per cent; if one-fourth of the crew be citizens, the rebate shall be 30 per cent; if one-fourth of the crew be citizens, the rebate shall be 40 per cent; if one-fourth of the crew be citizens, the rebate shall be 50 per cent; if one-fourth of the crew be citizens, the rebate shall be 50 per cent; if one-fourth of the crew be citizens, the re

Mr. SULZER. Now, Mr. Chairman, that bill speaks for itself, and I have had it read at the Clerk's desk for the purpose of getting it in the Record, so that the people who are interested in this great shipping question can read the bill, make comparisons, and judge accordingly. I place this tonnage-tax bill by the side of the Gallinger ship-subsidy bill and the new Grosvenor subsidy bill, and submit the merits of the two measures to the impartial judgment of the taxpayers of the country, confident that the general principles of my bill will be accepted by them in preference to those of the Gallinger or any other shipsubsidy bill. My bill is a practicable, honest, businesslike measure, and, in the opinion of those most competent to testify regarding this matter, its enactment into law will go far to solve the shipping problem, restore our merchant marine, place our flag on the high seas, and give us at least nine-tenths of our ocean-going commerce. There is a difference as wide as the poles between the principle of my bill and the principle of the other bills. My bill is a tonnage-tax bill, and the foreigner pays the tax. In other words, all goods brought to this country in foreign ships from countries not their own would have to pay a heavy tonnage tax. This being the case, foreign shipowners would have to charge higher freight rates than American shipowners, with the consequence that the American shipowners would get their share of employment. This would create a would get their share of employment. demand for American-built ships, and the demand would revive our languishing shipbuilding industries and the revival of those industries would give employment to thousands and thousands of workmen on both the Atlantic and Pacific coasts. Of course no foreign shipowner will commend my bill. No subsidy grabber advocates it. No shipowners' trust favors it. No marine monopoly likes it. Naturally every foreign shipowner is absolutely opposed to it, because every foreign shipowner knows that if a bill like this should become a law in this country in less than ten years the United States might be the mistress of the seas and do a large part of the deep-sea carrying trade of the world. I do not expect foreign shipowners to favor my bill, but I know when the question is understood by the taxpayers of our country every patriotic American will be in favor of my bill in preference to the Gallinger ship-subsidy bill, which takes money out of the pockets of the people of this country and pays it over in the nature of a gratuity to a special business interest. There is no graft in my bill; no private gain at public expense; it is just a plain, simple, practical, business, maritime measure for a tax on the tonnage of the gross admeasurement of foreign ships.

Mr. Chairman, I see my time is nearly consumed and I must conclude; and in doing so I want to say that my bill is not a makeshift. It is not a temporary expedient. It is a permanent remedy, and once adopted and upon the statute books it would continue in favor for years and years to come, until the American people possessed the greatest merchant marine in all the world; and I therefore say, in conclusion, that from a careful study of the whole subject-matter I sincerely believe that the adoption of such a measure as this, in my opinion, will speedily restore our ocean carrying trade, revive our shipbuilding industries, give employment in our shipyards to thousands and thousands of men in all parts of the country, bring about an era of prosperity such as we have never known before in our shipping trade and deep-sea commerce, place our flag on ships on every ocean and in every port, and make the American sailor what he was in the historic days of the Republic-the pride of the people, the master of the seas, and the arbiter of the ocean high-ways of the world. [Loud applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to print in connection with my speech some data bearing on the subject that I believe will be of interest to the members of this House and the country.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.]

The Chair hears none and it is granted.

Mr. SULZER. Now, I desire to offer and have printed in the RECORD as part of my remarks an explanatory statement of the contents of my bill for the restoration of the American merchant marine, giving a complete history of shipping legislation in the United States and also other valuable data in connection with the bill and the subject-matter, which I trust will be interesting not only to the Members of the House of Representatives, but to the people generally of the country. It is as follows:

NATIONAL IMPROVEMENT.

THE RECOVERY OF NAVIGATION.

[Explanatory statement to accompany H. R. 21196, introduced by Mr. Sulzer December 5, 1906.]

Sulzer December 5, 1906.]

Agriculture, manufactures, and commerce have always been regarded as interests of high national concern. Commerce includes navigation, without which it could not be carried on, These two factors being of equal importance, it is inconsistent that one should be cherished by the Government and the other suffered to be ruined. Though not intentional, such a course, to great national disadvantage and loss, has long been pursued in the United States.

The necessity existing that every independent maritime country shall have its own shipping for the carriage of its own commerce is a fact so evident that thoughtful men concede its truth. Commercial independence is a strong security for political freedom, and is based upon this relationship of the merchant to the carrier—the same flag for both. The prosperity of every people depends in great degree on freedom for industrial development, on equal opportunity with others, and on equitable relations with their neighbors. A dependent nation lacks in freedom, opportunity, and power, holds inferior rank, puts up with impositions, and submits necessarily to the rapacity of rivals and the spoliation of enemies. As seen in our own experience, lack of shipping power creates such dependency, with its evil consequences. Since our marine in foreign trade has disappeared our nation has been taking a post-graduate course as a British colony. We can carry on neither commerce nor war upon the ocean without the service of foreign shipping. This unfortunate exigency has brought in the foreign merchant and allen underwriter, the capitalistic workers for their country's flag, and these cooperate to prevent, if possible, any effort of Congress to recover our lost freedom, equality, and rank through the means of a merchant marine. With the lapse of time these evils, with others of the situation, have become intolerable.

OUR COMMERCIAL SITUATION INSECURE.

Such is now the predicament existing in our foreign trade relations. Foreigners now carry and conduct our commerce to the extent of 90 per cent. Our people have little to do with it, except to provide wharves, docks, and warehouses, furnish pilots and tugs, deepen harbors and channels, equip the coast with lights, and maintain hospitals. With a sweeping control of our foreign trade its alien managers are able to pass most of its immense volume through their own markets at their own prices. But for our tariff system they would do our manufacturing as they do our carrying, and put excessive prices on our imports. Through their commercial services, which would be better done by our own people, they absorb several hundreds of millions of export value every year, or accumulate adverse balances of commerce against us to be paid in gold. It is the want of shipping of our own that allows and favors this adverse action of our rivals, and causes our precious metals to be taken out of our mines so largely for foreign benefit and advantage. To continue a policy having such a fruitage can not be wise and good government.

The present generation of Americans has had scarcely any experience of the signal advantages of shipping of our own in foreign trade. We may dwell on one to which we have already alluded. Before the civil war, when import duties were moderate, it was our shipping trade mainly that carried our country through successfully year after year, with a balanced foreign commerce. Since the loss of our marine we have had to trust to the tariff alone—fortunately high enough to be of some assistance. It was a wonder to some why "hard times" continued under the tariff of 1894, and why "times" improved and the country became prosperous under the tariff of 1897. The difference in these cases is accounted for, partly, in the fact that we have not now the help of shipping in balancing our foreign trade as in former times, and must depend wholly on tariff regulations. While this remains the case our prosperity will be supersensitive.

"Times" can not be "good" while crushing debts, demanding the exportation of gold, are payable abroad. It is the function of the merchants and the shipping of a country to accomplish the balancing of its commerce and to make its prosperity steady and secure. Allen merchants and shipowners have the interest of their own countries to conserve, and though they conduct our trade they let our national good alone. As we are situated now—the carriage and conduct of our commerce in foreign hands—we stand defenseless, liable at any time, whenever the shipping nations of Europe may be engaged in warfare, to experience panies and years of adversity, solely on account of our commerce.

dependence upon them to carry and conduct over 90 per cent of our commerce.

Our danger is growing with time. We require now to have a balance of exports over imports of not less than four to five hundred millions of dollars per annum to continue prosperity. With a marine of our own, half of this might be sufficient. In fifty years we shall be a nation of 150,000,000 souls, and be obliged, no doubt, if without a marine, to export in excess of imports from eight to nine hundred—perhaps little short of a billion—dollars annually, with a tariff as high as the present, to maintain balanced foreign accounts with a fair degree of prosperity. Whence will come these extraordinary exports? Long before then our own population will be consuming so much of our eathable products as to leave, perhaps, very little for the sustenance of foreign nations, while our importations of foreign goods may continue without abatement, and, possibly, may be increased per capita. It is not the part of thoughtful citizens to let our country, through shipping dependency, drift into difficulty and bad circumstances, wretched and disgraced, for want of wise and adequate action for shipping restoration. It is already forty years since the close of the civil war, when Congress should have taken steps to improve the condition of our shipping trade, then plainly so impaired as never likely to recover without its judicious action. Delay has made bad matters well-nigh irreparable. So many hindrances now appear that the most efficient of remedies must be administered. Mere alleviations will be of no avail whatever. To do "something" for shipping is to do "nothing of consequence."

gave it up have returned to it in one or another form, even England now having a most effective system of devices, besides her subsidy policy.

ORIGIN OF OUE EARTH SHIPPING POLICY.

It has been supposed by many that our shipping policy was copied from the famous negistion acts of England—1021—1600—Int that Is a mistaken presumption. It had a native origin, and differed in principle from the British, under which only British vessels could import cargoes from Asia, Africa, or America, or carry between the colonies. In Europe the different nations might trade direct to England from their own countries on payment of discriminating duties. Our system thomacy and tariff duties being discriminating. British law had eight distinct prohibitions, while ours had none before 1817, when two were enacted, one confining foreign vessels to direct trade and another excluding them from the domestic.

While the younger marktime nations have ever found It difficult to the younger marktime nations have ever found It difficult to grow the younger marktime nations have ever found to the convinced of its propriety, most of them being familiar with the shipping laws of their own States, many of these having provided such encouragement as covered to the propriety of the propriety of the being familiar with the shipping laws of their own States, many of these having provided such encouragement as covered to the propriety of the propriety of these having provided such encouragement as shippwing, a business reaching back to the youth of the colonies; and to extend commerce, an ambition that had been cherished for one hundred and fitty years, should be as general and as strong as to advance agriculture and establish manufactures, since these three in fortifying the Independence of the country.

In most colonial charters discriminating duties were authorized. That of Virginia allowed a duty of 2½ per cent on all imported by foreigners (of course, in foreign vessels). Even produced the propriety of the propriety of the propriety of the propri

THE GERM OF NATIONAL SHIP PROTECTION.

While the American mind was shaping itself for this course the British were pursuing a policy of discouragement and hindrance, lest possibly the "States" might become in time active rivals in navigation. They had a maxim that the control of trade and transportation was a sure means of ruling the world. They made a treety of peace with us, but refused to make one of commerce and navigation such as other countries cheerfully conceded, and down to the present time have not done so. They meant to recover the carriage of our commerce, regain the control of our foreign trade, and be in position to resume political rule. This policy was initiated by a proclamation of the King (1783) opening to our vessels the home ports, but closing all in the loyal provinces and the West Indies. Had they not opened the home ports we might have directed our trade elsewhere. As it was, we could make only direct voyages, with cargo outward and ballast homeward, while they could come direct and return indirect, carrying cargo both ways. John Adams, as our minister to London, endeavored in vain for the third time to move the British to give our shipping fair play in the trade between the ports of the two countries, but no proposals would be entertained. In his letter of October 21, 1785, to our Secretary of Foreign Affairs Mr. Adams wrote thus:

"This being the state of things, you may depend upon it the commerce of America will have no relief at present, nor, in my opinion, ever, until the United States shall have generally passed navigation acts. If this measure is not adopted we shall be divided, and the more we suffer the more will our calamities be laughed at. My most earnest exhortations to the States, then, are, and ought to be, to lose no time in passing such acts."

A year previous the Confederate Congress had appointed a committee, with Thomas Jefferson chairman, to consider and report suitable action in view of the situation. It was recommended to make application to each State for a grant of power for fifteen years to enact and enforce regulations of commerce—"navigation laws"—adapted to encourage and protect the shipping of all the States. (This is the measure referred to by Mr. Adams.) This request not being fully complied with, the measure failed, and the States each for itself set about the work. Discriminating duties of tonnage and of tariff were the means employed. Results, a dozen different sets of "navigation laws," all alming to protect against foreign shipping, but acting also against the vessels of sister States. The measures were too moderate. Mr. Jefferson's plan, if carried out, would probably have been better.

It may be well to show, briefly, the chief provisions of the navigation laws of the several States, which were in force until superseded by acts of Congress, 1789, and afterwards—according to compact.

SHIP PROTECTION OF THE STATES, 1784-1789.

New York: Double duties on goods by British ships, whether brought

New York: Double duties on goods by British ships, whether brought directly or through other States.

New Jersey: Tonnage duties, no other charges.

Pennsylvania: Tonnage duties on ships of "treaty nations," 5. 8d. per ton; on those of other nations, 7s. 6d. per ton. Discriminating tariff duties on Asiatic goods, foreign merchants to pay 2 per cent extra; citizens to have a rebate of 5 per cent; teas direct from China in American vessels free, but dutied heavily if brought indirect or by foreign vessels.

Maryland: Tonnage duty on British vessels, $1 per ton; upon French or Dutch, 66 cents per ton. American vessels free.

Delaware: Tonnage dutles.

Virginia: Discriminating tonnage duties on French or Dutch vessels, 50 cents per ton; on British vessels $1 per ton; American vessels free. Brandy by American or French vessels free; rum by British ships taxed.

ships taxed.

North Carolina: Discriminating tonnage and tariff duties favoring American vessels.

South Carolina: Tonnage duty, 1s. 3d. per ton; 2 per cent ad valorem extra duty on goods in foreign bottoms.

Georgia: Tonnage duty, 1s. 8d. per ton on foreign vessels.

It was stated in Congress, 1789, that the discriminating duties of all the States averaged nearly 60 cents per ton. A Virginia Member said: "One dollar per ton did not prevent British vessels from thronging the ports for cargoes." As British vessels carried both ways, the dollar differential was too small. Pennsylvania seems to have had the most considerate and effective system. Mr. Fitzsimons, of that State, a merchant, said in 1789 that "the British had established among us merchants, agents, and factors of their own, taking possession of our trade and furnishing vessels for its carriage. In some States the whole of their commerce was thus carried on." (This is our predicament to-day.) The discrimination against British merchants, amounting to 7 per cent of tariff duties, aimed to correct this condition. Necessarily, it was up to the founders of the General Government, in convention, to devise a method of protection, which in due time should Americanize both our trade and transportation. Manifestly, the method adopted by the States would have to be taken over, revised, and made effective, or some better way be discovered.

The shipping acts of the States served as monitors to the Constitutional Convention. They caused the protection of shipping by regulations of commerce to be taken over by the General Government—no other procedure appearing wise. Confirmatory of this fact is General Washington's letter transmitting the Constitution to the Federal Congress, in which he remarked:

"The friends of our country have long seen and desired that the power of making war, peace, and treaties, that of levying money and regulating commerce, and the corresponding executive and judicial authorities should be fully and effectually vested in the General Govern ship protection an object of the Constitution thus declared to be the regulation of our foreign and domestic trade, in other words, the establishment of a system of protective "navigation laws." It was natural that in the convention this sentiment should be general. Some have supposed that the extreme Southern States, having but a scanty shipping, took no interest in providing for a merchant marine. This is a mistake. Mr. Charles Pinckney's plan for a constitution had a clause for the regulation of commerce; and Mr. Rutledge, in a speech, "reminded the House of the necessity of securing the West India trade to this country, * * * and a navigation act was necessary for obtaining it." These delegates were from South Carolina. The only question raised and settled was whether or not a two-thirds vote should be required for the passage of shipping acts, which was a manner of voting on certain subjects in the Federal Congress. The matter was thus brought up:

In the plan of the constitution reported to the convention by a committee appointed therefor August 6, 1787, section 2 of Article VII provided for the "regulation of commerce with foreign nations and between the States." General Pinckney, of South Carolina, desired that all laws regulating commerce "shall require the assent of two-thirds of the members present in each House." The delegates from South Carolina and Georgia wanted for a while the continuance of imports of African labor, and they argued that this was necessary to 'g'uce their States to adopt the constitution. The convention finding it difficult to agree on the migration proposition, the matter was referred to a committee of eleven. Mr. Gouverneur Morris, of Pennsylvania, "wished the whole subject to be committed, including the clause relating to taxes on exports and to a navigation act." Finally, Mr. Pinckney and Mr. Langdon moved to committee, in the order of States, consisted of Langdon, of New Hampshire; King, Johnson, Livingston, Clymer, Dickinson, Martin, Madison, Williamson, C. C. Pinckney, an

The convention changed the limit of A. D. 1800 to A. D. 1808. Mr. Pinckney moved to change the report as to the two-thirds vote to the following: "That no act of the legislature for the purpose of regulating the commerce of the United States with foreign powers or among the several States shall be passed without the assent of two-thirds of the Members of the House."

Mr. Pinchner yemarked "that there were five distinct commercial inserts of the States." It is not to the Members of States pure their interests with less exciple than independent of the Members of the Members of the Members of the Southern States. They did not need the protection of the Northern States at present."

Continuing, Mr. Pinckney said; "It-was the true interest of the Southern States to have no regulation of commerce, but considering the loss brought on, the commerce of the Eastern States by the Revorthern Members of the Me ing the foundation for a great empire, we ought to take a permanent view of the subject, and not look at the present moment only. He reminded the House of the necessity of securing the West Indian trade to this country. That was the great object, and a navigation act was necessary for obtaining it."

Mr. Randolph, of Virginia, said that there were features so odious in the Constitution as it now stands that he doubted whether he should be able to agree to it. A rejection of the motion would complete the deformity of the system. He took notice of the argument in favor of giving the power over trade to a majority, drawn from the opportunity foreign powers would have of obstructing retaliatory measures, if two-thirds were made requisite. He did not think there was weight in that consideration—the difference between a majority and two-thirds did not afford room for such an opportunity. Foreign influence would also be more likely to be exerted on the President, who would require three-fourths by his negative. He did not mean, however, to enter into the merits.

Mr. Gorham, of Massachusetts, replied: "If the Government is to be so fettered as to be unable to relieve the Eastern States, what motive can they have to join it, and thereby tie their own hands from measures which they could otherwise take for themselves? The Eastern States were not led to strengthen the Union by fear for their own safety. He deprecated the consequences of disunion, but if it should take place, it was the southern part of the continent that had the most reason to dread them. He urged the improbability of a combination against the interest of the Southern States; the different situations of the Northern and Middle States being a security against it. It was, moreover, certain that foreign ships would never be altogether excluded, especially those of nations in treaty with us."

THE COMPACT FOR NAVIGATION LAWS.

THE COMPACT FOR NAVIGATION LAWS.

Mr. Gorham was chairman of the Committee of the Whole. In closing the debate as he did he voiced the ultimatum of New England. That settled the question raised by General Pinckney's motion, and the report of the committee of eleven for striking out the "two-thirds" restriction "was agreed to nem. con." In pursuance of this vote clause 3 of section 8 of Article I of the Constitution not only empowers but makes it the duty of Congress—

"To regulate commerce with foreign nations and among the several States and with the Indian tribes."

Thus we have ship protection by navigation laws solemnly guaranteed in the very instrument that established the existence and function of Congress itself. We have even more. From the debate, especially from the closing speech, it is clear that this "enumerated power" was one of the "bonds and conditions" of the Union, just as much as the provision relative to the importation of African labor, or with respect to each State—big or little—having two Senators, or regarding the reservation of certain rights to the States, or any other fundamental proposition. Without the inclusion of ship protection by navigation laws in the Constitution, that instrument would not have been adopted. Massachusetts had most shipping, but Pennsylvania, New York, Maryland, and Virginia had respectable fleets in 1787, under protection of State laws, which would become inconsistent with the objects of the General Government; and if it did not assume the place of that of the States and legislate for shipping, there would have been a speedy end of the marine of "Young America," if the Constitution carried.

The foregoing debate and settlement of the shipping question in the objects of the General Government; and it is the constitution of that of the States and legislate for shipping, there would have been a speedy end of the marine of "Young America," if the Constitution carried.

The foregoing debate and settlement of the shipping question in the Constitutional Convention has not been a matter of common knowledge, and was not known even to our early Congressmen. The proceedings were kept secret for nearly fifty years. Few libraries to-day contain Madison's private record, first published in 1837 by the Government. But now that certain interests imagine that the Government is "so fettered" as to be "unable to relieve" any of our shipping States from the decay into which this interest is fallen, and, perforce, must adopt "a modern plan" unknown to the fundamental law, supported by taxation, it is high time the American people attained to a true knowledge of the whole subject.

As we have seen, the power to regulate commerce in the interest of our marines was granted by unanimous assent, and was specially intended for this purpose. We may see from the Constitution itself that this grant having been arranged, the States were divested of power to continue laying duties, either of tonnage or of tariff, for the same purpose. (See sec. 10 of Art. I.) Thus was the protection of shipping given up by the States and taken over by the General Government—the whole matter necessarily arranged by the Convention—action which was afterwards ratified by the States and the people through the adoption of the Constitution. By this adoption the States were relieved of their natural duty to protect, and the United States, in virtue of the compact of union, promised and undertook the stipulated duty.

POPULARITY OF THE SHIPPING COMPACT.

POPULARITY OF THE SHIPPING COMPACT.

There is ample evidence that no little of the popularity of the Constitution grew out of the shipping engagement. When its adoption was before the country, an orator of Pennsylvania held this argument:

"Every person must long since have seen the necessity of placing the exclusive power of regulating the commerce of America in the same body; without this it is impossible to regulate their trade. The same imposts, duties, and customs must equally prevail over all. * * * Whence comes it that the trade of this State, which abounds with materials for shipbuilding, is carried on in foreign bottoms? Whence comes it that shoes, boots, made-up clothes, hats, nails, sheet iron, hinges, and all other utensils of iron are of British manufacture? Whence comes it that Spain can regulate our flour market? These evils proceed from a want of one supreme controlling power in these States. They will all be done away with by adopting the present form of government. It will have energy and power to regulate your trade and commerce, to enforce the execution of your imposts, duties, and customs. Instead of the trade of this country being carried on in foreign bottoms, our ports will be crowded with our own ships and we shall become the carriers of Europe. Heavy duties will be paid on all foreign articles which can be manufactured in this country, and bounties will be granted on the exportation (?) of our commodities; the manufactories of our country will flourish, our mechanics will lift up their heads and rise to opulence and wealth."

History notes the fact that the compact for the regulation of commerce, so beneficial to the country, as predicted by the advocates of the Constitution, was promptly acknowledged by Congress through acts of legislation, and that, for a time, the power confided to their trust—for making and enforcing navigation laws in the interest of our marine in foreign trade—was exercised to the satisfaction of the people.

The General Congress began their work April 8, 1789, James Madison proposing, in Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, a tariff measure for revenue and trade regulation, and likewise a distinct measure of discriminating tonnage duties for the encouragement and protection of shipping. OUR NAVIGATION SYSTEM AS ORIGINATED.

Such were the measures comprising the "navigation laws" of the United States, worked out and instituted by the First Congress, using the power of the Constitution given in clause 3 of section 8 of Article I, "to regulate commerce with foreign nations and among the several States, and with the Indian tribes." These laws were purely regulative, and not for revenue, but for the protection of an important national interest—the merchant marine. The tariff system established was also partly regulative for protection of industry, as the preamble of the first act stated, the authority for this being found in the clause above cited. That the President, the Senate, and House understood the intention of this "enumerated power" is indisputable. Washington had been the President of the Constitutional Convention; Senators John Langdon, of New Hampshire; William S. Johnson, of Connecticut; Robert Morris, of Pennsylvania; William Few, of Georgía; Robert Paterson, of New Jersey; Richard Bassett and George Read, of Delaware; Rufus King, of New York, and Pierce Butler, of South Carolina—nine out of twenty-two Members—had been delegates to the Convention; so likewise had been Representatives Abraham Baldwin, of Georgía; George Clymer and Thomas Fitzsimons, of Pennsylvania; Daniel Carroll, of Maryland; Nicholas Gilman, of New Hampshire; Roger Sherman, of Connecticut, and James Madison, of Virginia—the statesman sometimes called "the father of the Constitution." These men—seventeen of the founders of the Government—knew what was implied in the regulation of commerce, and expressed in terms of "navigation laws" for the encouragement and protection of shipping power. They knew, also, that they were carrying out a compact of the Union with the States and people of the country, as true and honorable legislators they were in duty bound to do. In performing this task no private selfish interests were served. Sound economy and enlightened public policy—the national interest alone—were studied and advanced.

EFFORTS TO FURTHER ENCOURAGE NAVIGATION.

EFFORTS TO FURTHER ENCOURAGE NAVIGATION.

The protection given shipping by the acts of July 4 and 20 had scarcely been tested for efficacy when petitions for higher duty on foreign tonnage were sent to the Congress at the second session. One dollar per ton instead of 50 cents should be levied, especially on British ships. A report to the House May 10, 1790, caused a spirited debate, started by Mr. Smith, of South Carolina, a gentleman educated in England, while his countrymen were being shot down for demanding independence. He thought the increased duty "would bear hard on the South" and that the shipping people "should wait to learn the effects of the laws passed last session." Mr. Fitzsimons claimed that "notwithstanding the duty on foreign tonnage the produce of the country had never been in greater demand or had sold for a better price * *" He did not favor a prohibitory duty, at the same time it was a great misfortune to have the carrying trade monopolized by foreigners. Mr. Williamson, of North Carolina, favored, and Mr. Jackson, of Georgia, opposed, an increase of duty. Mr. Page, of Virginia, spoke strongly for the increase proposed. "The dollar rate which Virginia actually laid on British bottoms can not be too high, as that experiment was attended with happy effects, British merchants immediately giving that freight to Virginia ships which till then was refused them, and without increasing the freight in British bottoms." A motion to strike out the increase, and another to substitute 75 cents for $1, was negatived. Then Mr. Smith moved postponement of the resolution. Mr. Madison was willing to grant this if the shipping of France could be excepted from the advance in rate. He moved to this effect. Mr. Hartley, of Pennsylvania, strongly supported Madison, criticising severely the vindictive policy of the British Government. Mr. Sedgwick, of Messachusetts, thought "we ought not to condemn England for maintaining her exclusive and monopolistic navigation act. According to that act, all other nations were

JEFFERSON'S VIEWS AS TO A SHIPPING POLICY.

Mr. Jefferson had a theory of "free commerce" which he thought would be advantageous for all nations to carry out, but if this could not be done, then he favored full protection for American commerce and navigation. He detested especially the rapacious policy of Great Britain for its unfairness towards his country. Said he, in his famous re-not be done, then he favored full protection for American commerce and navigation. He detested especially the rapacious policy of Great Britain for its unfairness towards his country. Said he, in his famous report:

"If particular nations grasp at undue shares, and, more especially, if they seize on the means of the United States to convert them into aliment for their own strength and withdraw them entirely from the support of those to whom they belong, defensive and protecting measures become necessary on the part of the nation whose marine resources are thus invaded, or it will be disarmed of its defense, its productions will lie at the mercy of the nation which has possessed itself exclusively of the means of carrying them, and its politics may be influenced by those who command its commerce. The carriage of its own commodities, if once established in another channel, can not be resumed in the moment we may desire. If we lose the seamen and artists (mechanics) whom it now occupies, we lose the present means of marine defense, and time will be requisite to raise up others when disgrace or losses shall bring to our feelings the error of having abandoned them."

"I. Where a nation imposes high duties on our productions or prohibits them altogether, it may be proper for us to do the same by theirs; first, burdening or excluding those productions which they bring here in competition with our own of the same kind; selecting, next, such manufactures as we take from them in greatest quantity and which at the same time we could the soonest furnish to ourselves or obtain from other countries, imposing on them duties lighter at first, but heavier and heavier afterwards, as other channels of supply open. Such duties, having the effect of indirect encouragement to domestic manufactures of the same kind, may induce the manufacture to come himself into the States, where a cheaper subsistence, equal laws, and a vent for his wares, free of duty, may insure him the highest profits from his skill and industry. " The propersion

"4. Where a nation refuses to consider any vessel as ours which has not been built within our territories, we should refuse to consider theirs any vessel not built within their territories.

"5. Where a nation refuses to our vessels the carriage even of our own productions to certain countries, under their dominion, we might refuse to theirs of every description the carriage of the same productions to the same countries. But as justice and good neighborhood would dictate that those who have no part in imposing the restriction on us should not be victims of measures adopted to defeat its effect, it may be proper to confine the restriction to vessels owned or navigated by any subjects of the same dominant power other than the inhabitants of the country to which the said productions are to be carried. And to prevent all inconvenience to the said inhabitants and to our own by too sudden a check on the means of transportation, we may continue to admit the vessels marked for future exclusion on an advanced tonnage [duty] and for such length of time only as may be supposed necessary to provide against that inconvenience.

"The establishment of some of these principles by Great Britain alone has already lost us in our commerce with that country and its possessions between eight and nine hundred vessels of near 40,000 tons burden, according to the statements from official sources in which they have confidence. This involves a proportional loss of seamen, shipwrights, and shipbuilding, and is too serious a loss to admit forbearance of some effectual remedy.

"It is true we must expect some inconvenience in practice from the establishment of discriminating duties. But in this, as in so many other cases, we are left to choose between two evils. These inconveniences are nothing when weighed against the loss of wealth and loss of force which will follow our perseverance in the plan of indiscrimination. When once it shall be perceived that we are either in the system or in the habit of giving equal advantages to those who extinguish our commerce and navigation by duties and prohibitions as to those who treat both with liberality and justice, liberality and justice will be converted by all into duties and prohibitions. It is not to the moderation and justice of others we are to t

THE MADISON RESOLUTIONS OF 1794.

When Mr. Jefferson's report was made it was known that our marine was enlarging and our share of carriage increasing with time. Entrances of our tonnage in foreign trade had risen at an average of 50 per cent annually, and our carriage gain averaged about 11 per cent for exports and 15 per cent for imports. This progress was good, but not quite satisfactory. Our utmost encouragement had not been given, and justice to ourselves demanded its full extent. As a sequel to the report, Mr. Madison, in 1794, introduced in the House a set of resolutions looking to further protection of commerce and navigation, remarking that "the commerce of the United States was not at this day on that respectable footing to which, from its nature and importance, it is entitled." He referred to the situation before the adoption of the Constitution, when conflicting systems of encouragement prevailed in the different States. "The then existing state of things gave rise to that convention of delegates from the different States (at Annapolis), who met to deliberate on some general principles for the regulation of commerce which might be conducive, in their operation, to the general welfare. " But what has been the result of the system which has been pursued ever since? What is the present situation of our commerce? From the situation in which we find ourselves after four years' experiment, it appeared incumbent on the United States to see whether they could not now take measures promotive of those objects for which the Government was in a great degree instituted." " Resolved, As the opinion of this committee, that the interest of the United States would be promoted by further restrictions and higher duties in certain cases on the manufactures and navigation of foreign nations employed in the commerce of the United States than those now imposed.

"1. That an additional duty ought to be levied on the following with the United States. * * *

"2. That an additional duty of — per ton ought to be laid on the vessels belonging to nations having no commercial treaty with the United States.

"3. That the duty on vessels belonging to the nations having treaties with the United States ought to be reduced to — per ton.

"4. That where any nation may refuse to consider as vessels of the United States any vessel not built within the United States, the foreign-built vessels of such nation ought to be subjected to a like refusal, unless built within the United States. (We admitted to registry as American all foreign-built vessels owned by citizens on May 16, 1789. These the British would not recognize as American.)

"5. Where any nation may refuse to admit the produce or manufactures of the United States, unless in vessels belonging to the United States, or to admit them in vessels of the United States if last imported from any place not within the United States, a like restriction ought, after the — day of — , to be extended to the produce and manufactures of such nation, and that, in the meantime, a duty of — per ton extraordinary ought to be imposed on vessels so importing any such produce or manufactures.

"6. That where any nation may refuse to the vessels of the United States a carriage of the produce or manufactures thereof, while such produce or manufactures are admitted by it in its own vessels, it would be just to make the restriction reciprocal; but masmuch as such a measure, if suddenly adopted, might be particularly distressing in cases which merit the benevolent attention of the United States, it is expedient for the present that a tonnage duty extraordinary only of be imposed on the vessels so employed, and that all distilled spirits imported therein shall be subject to an additional duty of one — part of the existing duty.

"That provision ought to be made for liquidating and ascertaining the losses sustained by citizens of the United States from the operation of particular regulations of any country contravening t rights, without violating the rights or even the equitable pretensions of other nations—by doing no more than most nations do for the protection of their interests, and much less than some—to make her interests respected. For what we receive from other nations are but luxuries to us, which if we choose to throw aside we could deprive part of the manufacturers of those luxuries of even bread if we are forced to the contest of self-denial. This being the case, our country may make her enemies feel the extent of her power. * * *"

In the debate following Mr. Smith, of South Carolina, brought his British training to bear in an effort to protect foreign interests. He contended that "we were not worse off than France," then warred upon by the British.

enemies feel the extent of her power. " ""

In the debate following Mr. Smith, of South Carolina, brought his British training to bear in an effort to protect foreign interests. He contended that "we were not worse off than France," then warred upon by the British.

Answering Mr. S., Mr. Madison said in part:

"The propositions before the committee turned on the question whether anything ought to be done at this time in the way of commercial regulations toward vindicating and advancing our national interests. " He professed himself "a friend to the theory which gives to industry a free course, under the impulse of Individual interests and the guidance of Individual sagaty." Exceptions, and the rule itself required what did not exist—that it should be general. To illustrate, the British navigation act, not being counterbalanced by any similar acts, had secured to Great Britain eleven-twelfths (91.66 per cent) of the shipping and seamen employed in her trade. " "

"To allow trade to regulate itself is not, therefore, to be admitted as a maxim universally sound. Our own experience has taught us that, in certain cases, it is the same thing with allowing one nation to regulate it for another. " " A small burden only in foreign ports on American vessels and a perfect equality of foreign vessels with our own in our own ports would gradually vanish the latter altogether."

Mr. Madison proved this from our own history, scant as it then was, but, were he living now, what a demonstration he could make. He went on to tell us why the Constitution was adopted. British, which began to be felt in our trade and navigation, excited universal attention and inquietude. The first effort thought of was an application of Congress to the States for a grant of power for a limited time (fifteen years) to regulate our foreign commerce."

This effort failing, the States next endeavored to effect their purpose by separate but concurrent regulations. Massachusetts opened a correspondence with Virginia and other States in order to bring abou

SHIP PROTECTION IN EARLY TREATIES.

It has now been sufficiently shown that Congress, in pursuance of the compact with the States, entered upon the duty of ship protection with a determination on the part of leaders to build up a commerce and navigation commensurate with the interests of the Republic. Indeed, this view of the duty of government to the country obtained from the first day of independence. This fact stands out in our diplomatic efforts as initiated by Benjamin Franklin, a believer in the freedom of trade. The treaties with France, Holland, and Sweden contained preambles admitting the right to protest against inequalities of footing. The following is from the Netherlands treaty, 1783:

"Desiring to ascertain in a permant and equitable manner the rules to be observed relative to the commerce and correspondence which they intend to establish between their respective States, countries, and inhabitants, have judged that the said end can not be better obtained than by establishing the most perfect equality and reciprocity for the basis of their agreements, and by avoiding all those burdensome preferences which are usually the sources of debate, embarrassment, and discontent; by leaving also each party at liberty to make, respecting commerce and navigation, such uiterior regulations as it shall find most convenient to itself and by founding the advantages of commerce solely upon reciprocal utility and the just rules of free intercourse; reserving withal to each party the liberty of admitting at its pleasure other nations to a participation of the same advantages."

ATTEMPTS OF ENGLAND TO CHANGE OUR POLICY.

It was after making the above-named treaties that our States enacted their navigation laws already described. From the first Great Britain was alone in her opposition, and has continued alone to antagonize every effort of "America" to become a power at sea. As to commerce, she refused to treat. As early as 1789 Parliament appointed a committee under Lord Liverpool to note and to study the acts of Congress, and to report measures for their counteraction in respect to ship protection. For twenty-five years the British ministry watched and worked to wheedle or coerce our Government into an abandonment of discriminating duties in the trade between the two countries. This course began openly in the making of the "Jay treaty," 1794, which provided for twelve years that we would not increase our discriminating duties against her vessels and would permit her to countervail those in force. In 1802 Parliament passed an act that it was desired our Congress would reciprocate, providing for perpetual non-protection of shipping. It had no response. In 1806 a treaty was brought over by our commissioners looking to the same policy, but Mr. Jefferson returned it without submission to the Senate, for one-sidedness. In 1804 we had added 50 cents to our tonnage duty, as "lightmoney" tax, which the British ship had to pay because our vessels paid such tax in British ports. It was then determined to provoke a war which should sweep the seas of "Yankee" ships. We were obliged at last to accept this challenge. When peace came to be made a dilemma was presented—to cease ship protection by the means then common or to continue the war. Our Government gave way, making a "convention" for four years for a mutual suspension of discriminating duties in the direct commerce of the two countries, the West Indies remaining closed, as since 1783. In 1818 England insisted on continuing this convention for ten years, and again, in 1827, for ten more or until the expiration of one year from notice of either party. Thus it stands.

By giving way to Great Britain in 1815, we initiated a change of Indies remaining closed, as since 1783. In 1818 England insisted on continuing this convention for ten years, and again, in 1827, for ten more or until the expiration of one year from notice of either party. Thus it stands.

By giving way to Great Britain in 1815, we initiated a change of policy that never should have been made. The change was the worst feature, although a most unfair commerce resulted from if. British shipping brought out such goods as our market would accept; then they took cargo for the West Indies; there they loaded for the United States, discharged here, and loading again they sailed homeward, having paid no duties, for protection of "Yankee" shipping. American vessels could load and sail for a British port in Europe, there discharge, and return home in ballast, there being no discriminating duty to induce merchants to give them freights. They could not load and sail from England to a British West India port under penalty of confiscation of hull and cargo. They paid no discriminating duties, except for lights in British European ports, but neither could they get the carriage of British-owned cargoes, with protective duties off. Such duties never exceeded 25 per cent of the amount of a freight. It paid well to pay them in foreign ports, if by their means foreign merchants were induced to load our ships. Saving the duty lost the load homeward. There was no statesmanship in that for us. Besides, where we were entitled to half the transportation of the commerce with Great Britain, our vessels could get but one-quarter. Entitled to half the transportation of the commerce with Great Britain, our vessels could get but one-quarter. Entitled to half the transportation of the commerce with Great Britain, our vessels could get but one-quarter. Entitled to half the transportation of the commerce with Great Britain, our vessels could get but one-quarter. Entitled to half the transportation of the commerce with Great Britain and the manufacture of the convention minimized. In 1819 if would terminate how policy might have come down to the present day, and the American marine been now the glory of the Republic, as in early times.

It was argued that our vessels no longer required protection—while our navigation had been "the child of protection." In forty years it had become "a glant." For ten years past its protection had been the greatest of any period. In 1827 our share of carriage in our own commerce was, for imports, 94.3 per cent, and for exports, 87.5 per cent. In the two years preceding our carriage had been even greater. Some of our statesmen thought our ships could carry for all the world, if only protection was stripped off, notwithstanding the protective system of England was then in full operation. This notion was not based on the experience of any country, but was a bit of illusion. It was thought, too, England would see so much advantage in reciprocation that the ministry would jump at the proposition; but not they; they had the virtue of wariness, and avoided a step that might prove perilous for twenty-one years. By 1840 eighteen countries had made reciprocity conventions with us, and our percentage of carriage in our own commerce had fallen, for imports, 12.9 per cent, and for exports, 8.6 per cent, in consequence of our liberality.

From these figures the ultimate loss of at least the greater part of our carriage was plainly indicated. David Ricardo, noting this fact, pointed out in Parliament that the "indirect" voyages of vessels paid the best, and that England was losing much profitable business by not accepting the principle of our act of 1828 and sharing with other nations in the indirect carriage of American commerce. As our law stood, the merchants of England, for generations established in every port of the world, if they made shipments to the United States were obliged to freight American vessels. Why? Because, by a law of 1817, British ships could not enter cargoes from non-British ports. This was the best protection our shipping had ever had. If Ricardo could get it done away, as to our reckless haste in rushing to ruin. Severe losses of carriage resulted, as statistics show:

Year.	Import car- riage.	Export car- riage.
1849	Per cent. 81.4 77.8 75.6 74.5 71.5 71.8 60.0	Per cent. 68. 9 65. 5 69. 8 66. 5 67. 1 60. 2 72. 1

In four years our loss of import carriage was 10 per cent; in twelve ears it was over 21. When the act of May, 1828, was under debate was dubbed "an olive branch" for England—it might have been illed a "treasure chest." Here is its text:

THE RECIPROCITY ACT OF 1828.

"That upon satisfactory evidence being given to the President of the United States by the government of any foreign nation that no discriminating duties of tonnage or impost are imposed or levied in the ports of said nation upon vessels wholly belonging to citizens of the United States, or upon the produce, manufactures, or merchandise imported in the same from the United States, or from any foreign country, the President is hereby authorized to issue his proclamation declaring that the foreign discriminating duties of tonnage and import within the United States are, and shall be, suspended and discontinued so far as respects the vessels of the said foreign nation, and the produce, manufactures, and merchandise imported into the United States in the same from the said foreign nation, or from any other foreign country; the said suspension to take effect from the time of such notification being given to the President of the United States, and to continue so long as the reciprocal exemption of vessels belonging to citizens of the United States and their cargoes, as aforesaid, shall be continued, and no longer."

United States and their cargoes, as aforesaid, shall be continued, and no longer."

The advantage to British shipping in accepting the terms of this act may be judged from the fact that it now makes use of our ports in proportion to 7 or 8 tons of British to 1 of ours, as shown in the payment of tonnage taxes in foreign trade. Also in the value of commerce brought indirect, which, in 1902, was 30 per cent of our total imports; while it was over 55 per cent of the total brought by British vessels. This indirect carriage is a privilege—it is not a right—granted in violation of the right of our own vessels on the supposition that no hurt to them would follow, but our carrying trade has been ruined, and we receive actually no reciprocation, compensation, or quid pro quo for our transgression. This takes the practical form of a bag of tribute money to a nation that is responsible far beyond all others for our dependence on the ocean—a nation that would rejoice at any misfortune that should cause a sundering of our Union and the downfall of our Republic. For this nation we cast away our own ship and build up its power to monopolize the shipbuilding, navigation, and commerce of the world. Can our statesmen realize all this, and yet do nothing toward repealing this act of 1828 and restoring to the American people the shipping rights guaranteed by the Constitution?

THE PRINCIPLES OF THE ACT OF 1828.

do nothing toward repealing this act of 1828 and restoring to the American people the shipping rights guaranteed by the Constitution?

THE PRINCIPLES OF THE ACT OF 1828.

When this measure was introduced at the instance of John Quincy Adams, then President, it was in charge of Senator Lloyd, of Massachusetts, 1826; but on passage it was managed by Senator Woodbury, of New Hampshire, who, it is evident, delighted in his job. From -1834 to 1840 he was Secretary of the Treasury, in charge of commerce and navigation, and could have studied the fill effects of his act. On the principles of this he thus expatiated:

"These principles embraced the great paramount one of all, that trade shall be free; that all shackles on commerce should be stricken of, and in accordance with the lights and spirit of the present age, that all country which justly boasts of the freedom and superiority of its institutions nothing is to be feared from a rivalship on this subject—free as air and extensive as the widest range of civilization."

This was, therefore, on the part of some, an acknowledged "freetrade" measure, not passed by a free-trade Congress, but by the very same that enacted the extraordinary tariff of 1828. This law is sustained now, as then, by the highest protectionists that we have had making law for last forty years. Such is the strange inconsistency of the human mind. Unfortunately for the credit of "free trade" and the wisdom of Senator Woodbury, this law stands as a memorable of the luman mind. Unfortunately for the credit of "free trade" and the wisdom of Senator Woodbury did not base his argument on facts in our history or any other, or even on the principles of his bill, but appealed to conceit, to vanity and delusion, sentiments in antagonism to the proven value of one ship protection. Here is why he would cast it off:

"We are known to possess a skill and economy in building vessels, a cheapness in fitting them out, an activity in salling them, which without discrimination, would give us an advantage in coping protection to the employment of our vessels were never discussed in the proposing, advocating, or opposing of any of our ship-reciprocity bills. Only the notions of impractical men were aired. Says Woodbury: "By this bill we now hold out the olive branch to all!" So he sacrificed our marine to placate our rivals and enemies, instead of keeping our ports shut against them forever, should that be necessary. And after all a special act had to be passed, in 1830, to get the West India ports opened, showing that our sacrifice missed its purpose, unless that was to kill off our ship protection and destroy our carrying trade—in British interest. There was never a falser step in the government of any country, and yet that step is retaken day after day, by one administration after another, as a fanatic fights and dies in what seems to him a holy cause. to him a holy cause.

WOODBURY BLIND TO HIS ABERRANCY.

With all his political science, Mr. Woodbury was unacquainted with e uses of a marine in foreign trade. When Secretary of the Treas-y, in 1838, he stumbled on a mystery, which he thus stated and exury, in 1838, he stumbled on a mystery, which he thus stated and explained:

"The history of our commerce during the twenty years from 1818 to 1838 presents a singular change in the last half of that period, which tends strongly to illustrate the correctness of these suggestions. During the first half of it the excess of imports over exports was only about $75,000,000, or in the proportion of nearly $7,500,000 annually. But during the last ten years of it the excess was nearly $212,000,000 annually, and thus more than 250 per cent greater than it had been. Supposing that the $7,500,000 were composed principally of the fair profits and difference in valuation, the excess over that rate in the last ten years must constitute a debt, either mercantile, State, or corporate. It equals nearly $137,000,000 before 1839."

The Secretary thought this debt arose mainly "from importations beyond our wants." We may have required the goods, but the point is that we did not pay for them. Why? Because the falling off in tonnage per capita had been from an average of 5.91 cubic feet for the ten years of 1819–1828 to an average of 4.62 cubic feet for the ten years of 1829–1838, a decrease of 28 per cent in navigation. Also, there was a falling off in our proportion of carriage for the last term as against the first from an average of 92.35 to 90.43 per cent for imports and from 86.39 to 79.17 per cent for exports, an average decline of 5.11 per cent, and this upon a per capita tonnage reduced 28 per cent. Wherefore? As a result of Adams's and Woodbury's openand-free shipping policy. Carriage in the export trade is itself an export. Our loss on this item from one period to the other was 8.35 per cent. The man who ignores the function of shipping in balancing commerce has much to learn before he assumes the role of a statesman.

PRESIDENT MONROE'S ACCOUNT OF RECIPROCITY.

merce has much to learn before he assumes the rôle of a statesman.

PRESIDENT MONROE'S ACCOUNT OF RECIPROCITY.

In his message of December 5, 1821, we find a brief sketch of reciprocity, its objects and adoption, by President Monroe, a statesman familiar with all the facts in the history of our marine:

"By an act of the 3d of March, 1815, * * * a proposition was made to all nations to place our commerce with each other on a basis which, it was presumed, would be acceptable to all. Every nation was allowed to bring its manufactures and productions into our ports and to take the manufactures and productions of the United States back to their ports in their own vessels on the same conditions that they might be transported in vessels of the United States, and in return it was required that a like accommodation should be granted to the vessels of the United States in the ports of other powers. The articles to be admitted or prohibited on either side formed no part of the proposed arrangement. Each party would retain the right to admit or prohibit such articles from the other as it thought proper and on its own conditions.

the United States in the ports of other powers. The articles to be admitted or prohibited on either side formed no part of the proposed arrangement. Each party would retain the right to admit or prohibit such articles from the other as it thought proper and on its own conditions.

"When the nature of the commerce between the United States and every other country was taken into view, it was thought that this proposition would be considered fair, and even liberal, by every power.

* * * By placing, then, the navigation precisely on the same ground, in the transportation of exports and imports between the United States and other countries, it was presumed that all was offered which could be desired. It seemed to be the only proposition which could be devised which would retain even the semblance of equality in our favor."

It will be noticed particularly that this reciprocity, unlike that of 1828, applied to direct trade only. British vessels could not bring cargoes from non-British countries. It left the "indirect" trade of all nations to American ships, or to those of the country producing the cargo. Out of more than eighty countries and communities in the world, only about one-quarter sail ships at sea in foreign trade. This reciprocity, therefore, applied to the navigating nations alone. It was devised for us, but with special reference to British interest, which was hard to satisfy. When Congress authorized this reciprocity it was expected that the British would permit its application to their colonies, and thus settle the West India question. In fact, it is believed this assurance was given sub rosâ. Says President Monroe:

"Many considerations of great weight gave us a right to expect that this commerce would be extended to the colonies as well as to the European dominions of other powers. With the latter, especially with the colonies, and with the greater reason, as it was known that the supplies which the colonies derived from us were of the highest importance to them, * and because, likewise, the article

CONGRESSIONAL BREACH OF COMPACT.

After we had surrendered the right to protect our navigation in direct trade under the act of 1815 and by the conventions following, there remained but one other right to give up and abandon—that was the right to protect our navigation in the indirect trade. That right had been effectually exercised in 1817 by restricting foreign vessels to direct trade only from their own country or its colonies and possessions. That law conceded all their rights, but refused privileges, that were incompatible with the survival of our own shipping. But while these reciprocity measures were under consideration, especially that of 1828, what was thought of the compact for ship protection? It was undoubtedly in the mind of President Madison, in that of his Secretary of State, James Monroe, and advised upon by Thomas Jefferson. Monroe tells us the stripping of protection from the "indirect" trade was considered inadmissible in 1815. The reason assigned is the inequality that would arise, but there was doubtless the further reason that the compact of union would be broken. As a matter of equity and good conscience, so far as protection in direct trade was essential to the survival of our marine, it was a violation of the compact to suspend it. Indeed, the act of 1815 repealed our discriminating duties in direct trade, but itself was repealed in 1819, to take effect in 1824, only to be soon after reenacted, the word "suspend" taking the place of the word "repeal." The words in the act of 1828 are "suspended and discontinued." Adams and Clay may not have known Congress was not at liberty to play at ducks and drakes with ship protection—to strip it off and present it as a cast-off robe—a peace offering to our enemies, but we have no evidence that they cared. Had either of these men cared, they were in Congress for years afterwards and would have taken some opportunity to move for a correction of their mistake when they saw from statistics that our carrying trade was gradually passing into foreign hands.

It seems superfluous to argue

OUR SHIPPING EXPERIENCE UNDER OPPOSITE POLICIES.

OUR SHIPPING EXPERIENCE UNDER OFPOSITE POLICIES.

In the table following is given a list of countries under reciprocity, with a condensed statement showing the operation of our shipping policy throughout our history, and the effect produced on transportation. This last is shown by the tonnage employed, but better by the proportion of American carriage, since the tonnage may be large, but not all in use, as in 1858 to 1863. The column of carriage shows distinctly the results of competition for employment. When it has been severe, our percentage falls; when it eases up, our percentage rises, as a general rule, since the navigation laws are constant influences tending to regulate foreign competition, of course wars and the larger events interfere with competition, and may increase or diminish it, but, with their cessation, competition assumes its way.

The periods before reciprocity, 1789-1815; from partial reciprocity to full, 1815-1828, and after full reciprocity, 1828-1906, are plainly designated. The constant and ruinous decline in our carriage is seen to originate after our reciprocity conventions began to take effect, and has continued with the extension of privileges to foreign shipping ever since. This is not only consistent with the principle involved—the survival of the strongest or best protected—but with the logic that would sacrifice any industry needing encouragement. Besides, the demonstration of the folly of our false policy is complete.

MEANING OF INDICES.

The index figures in second and fourth columns explain some of the conditions of the agreements.

1. Extension or renewal of term.

2. Terminated by foreign country giving notice required.

3. Merged into another country.

4. Superseded by later treaty or convention.

5. Terminated by war.

6. Convention at first protective on both sides; became nonprotective in 1828; terminable after six months' notice.

7. Continuable by its own terms; terminable on one year's notice.

8. As to shipping reciprocity articles only.

9. By act of Congress—repealable by same.

10. To be revised if desired after five years.

11. Abrogated by treaty 1853.

Italics. Countries we now have agreements with.

Ind. Term is indefinite, but terminable after one year's notice.

None. No term stated. Only two of these now valid.

In the course of elighty-four years we made "maritime reciprocity" agreements with forty-two countries, only a dozen of them of any importance—and those prior to 1850—about twenty of no consequence, and the remainder quite moderate in pretensions at sea. We have such agreements now with twenty-two countries, ten of them inconsequential in point of commerce; one now without a port. Fiften agreements have been terminated by twelve countries, presumably for want of utility.

Our damaging competition, under our present free and open policy, has been mostly from the British. No doubt every shipping nation can make the like declaration. Only for the time between 1818 and 1830 did we have the advantage of them in time of peace. They are the nation that makes ship protection necessary to the nations of the world. Their writers have endeavored to make it appear that not their unfair and vicious competition but "economic" cause were to blame for our undoing—for instance, the use of wooden sailing ships to oppose their metal steamers; the "high protective tariff," that increased the wages of shipwrights and seamen; and the greater cost of metal materials, also due to "protection." But iron ships—the steame

The following will illustrate the usual articles of conventions for their termination:

"ART. II. It shall be competent, however, to either of the contracting parties, in case either should think fit, at any time after the expiration of the said ten years—that is, after the 20th of October, 1828—on giving due notice of twelve months to the other contracting party, to annul and abrogate this convention, and it shall, in such case, be accordingly annulled and abrogated after the expiration of the said term of notice."

There is a sentiment indulged in by some that our reciprocity agreements should continue; that we should not regulate our trade, but get ship protection some other way. But there is no authority in the Constitution for shipping reciprocity agreements—agreements to nonprotect our navigation. Nor is there authority to protect our navigation. Nor is there authority to protect our navigation in any other way than through regulations of commerce.

It is also set up by some that it would be discourteous and rude to terminate an agreement by which a rival is worsting us, but they have all agreed beforehand to the propriety of such action, and we have ample precedent in our own history. By an act of Congress July 7, 1798, we abrogated four treaties with France. In 1864 we abrogated at end of term a commercial reciprocity agreement with Great Britain for trade with Canada, and in 1879 we abrogated the "Burlingame" treaty with China. Not one of these agreements can be compared with our "maritime-reciprocity" conventions for their hurtfulness and harm to the country through the consequences of the shipping dependency which they have created.

OUR DOCTRINE OF SHIPPING RIGHTS.

The peculiar course of Great Britain toward the United States in our early history caused a study of the subject of international commerce the world over, especially by American statesmen intent upon securing the natural rights of a young and independent maritime nation. What these rights are became matter for serious thought and considerate, but resolute, action. Considering the question in its broader aspects, as did Doctor Franklin and other of our prominent statesmen, the transportation between two nations is a part of their commerce, and, in direct trading, plainly belongs to each country to do, and not to any third party. If one country has not the vessels and the other has them, then the whole transportation manifestly belongs to that one, and can not be justly claimed by any other. There is, therefore, no ground of right for a monopoly of navigation.

While some nations unskilled in navigation have been content to have no shipping and only a passive commerce, others qualified to build and sail have been alert to the importance of an active commerce carried on by their own vessels for two weighty reasons: First, to avoid dependence on foreign shipping, with its evils; second, to prevent payment of freights to vessels of other nations, which creates or increases adverse balances of commerce. The shipless nation is generally in foreign debt, nonprogressive, and seldom prosperous.

Regarding the true theory of commerce, said Senator Rufus King, of New York, in 1818:

"As all nations have equal rights and each may claim equal advantages in its intercourse with others, the true theory of international commerce is one of equality and reciprocal benefits. This gives to skill and to capital their just and natural advantages; any other scheme is artificial."

and to capital their just and natural advantages; any other scheme is artificial."

It was largely due to denial of equality in the matter of shipping that caused the Revolution of 1776. The colonists were treated as subordinate to their fellow-subjects; their industries and the use of their vessels were placed under inferior regulations—just as in the discriminating insurance policies of the London Lloyds still extant. It is therefore imperative now, as in the beginning, that an American system of commerce should look to protection of some kind that shall even up disadvantages and secure equality in the footing of vessels, whether natural or created by devices of our rivals, and thus conduce to the conduct of "fair commerce" and a just sharing of transportation.

That our natural rights should be protected is self-evident and axiomatic. Said Senator Barbour, of Virginia, in 1818:

"Vain, foolish, your resolutions to build ships, unless you protect your navigation. It is not to the superior fixtures of your vessels or the ampleness of their supplies you are to look for victory, but to the number and experience of your sailors. If you suffer the power who looks with jealousy on your rising commerce and with envy on the glory of your Navy to exclude you from the participation of those advantages which of right, as being derived from nature, belong to you, abandon all thoughts of an efficient marine and withdraw from the ocean."

Mr. Barbour was a Virginia farmer, but he was no less a statesman. He feared it would some time happen that, ceasing to protect our navigation, we would have to retire from the sea in disrepute.

The despotic disposition of England always justified the notion that in navigation, there are no rights her subjects need respect. Might gation, we would have to retire from the sea in disrepute.

The despotic disposition of England always justified the notion that in navigation there are no rights her subjects need respect. Might makes all the right there is; let him take who can. This being so, American vessels had no right to take cargoes into British West Indian ports, although the articles were much in demand and the trade was open to British and other vessels. Said President Madison, in his special message of 1812:

"It has become sufficiently certain that the commerce of the United States is to be sacrificed, not as interfering with the belligerent rights of Great Britain, not as supplying the wants of her enemies, which she herself supplies, but as interfering with the monopoly which she covets for her own commerce and navigation. She carries on a war against the lawful commerce of a friend that she may the better carry on a commerce with an enemy—a commerce polluted by the forgeries and perjuries which are for the most part the only passports by which it can succeed."

can succeed."

Felix Grundy, of Tennessee, declared:

Felix Grundy, of Tennessee, declared:

"It is not the carrying trade about which this nation and Great Britain are now contending. The true question is the right of exporting the products of our own soil and industry to foreign markets. Our vessels are captured when destined to ports of France. * * * These depredations on our lawful commerce are not to be traced to any rules or maxims of public law, but to the maritime supremacy and pride of the British nation. * * * What, Mr. Speaker, are we called on to decide? It is whether we will resist by force the attempt made by that Government to subject our maritime rights to the arbitrary and capricious rule of her will. For my part, I am not prepared to say that this country shall submit to have her commerce interdicted or regulated by any foreign nation. Sir, I prefer war to submission."

MAIN POINTS OF OUR SHIPPING RIGHTS.

In short, as may be fully shown, the American doctrine in relation to the vessel-carrying trade, is this: Our shipping has the natural right and is entitled—right and is entitled—

1. To carry American exports to any country whose ports are open to receive them by other vessels.

2. To carry American commerce, exports or imports, between the United States and other countries, their vessels participating with ours mutually in the carriage required to the extent of one-half the volume

3. To carry all the commerce between the United States and another country, if it has no vessels of its own with which to do its share of

4. In respect to domestic commerce, American vessels are entitled to all—coasting, lake and river—no foreign vessels having any right to all—coasting, lake and river—no foreign vessels having any right whatever.

5. Further, the Government of the United States has the natural right and is entitled to regulate its foreign trade in a way to secure and protect all our shipping rights against the adverse footing, or protective policies and devices, of foreign countries. Further still, the Government of the United States is under a constitutional compact, as sacred as any other in that instrument, with the maritime States, to perform its duty in the enforcement of proper laws for the encouragement and protection of American navigation and to see that engagements with foreign nations involve no sacrifice of this very important interest.

Such being the principles governing the interest of the American people in the carriage of their own commerce, it can not be too often or too strongly insisted upon that American navigation for American commerce is not merely a just natural sentiment, but an imprescriptible national right, to be enjoyed equally with all other rights. And as this right may, and constitutionally must, be protected by regulations of commerce, the question is up to the Government, Why should one cent of subvention, to conciliate any nation, ever be paid from the Treasury for the partial support of a freighting marine? There is such a thing as overdone conciliation. That has already been the sacrificial altar of our marine. Our moderation on that occasion has but passed for obsequionsness.

FRINCIPLES OF THE MEASURES EMBRACED IN THE BILL.

The difficulties of our shipping situation are now such that the provisions of a measure that two location are now such that the provisions of a measure that the provisions of

The difficulties of our shipping situation are now such that the provisions of a measure that would have been effectual forty years ago would be quite impotent now. The means necessary to-day must be plenary, if not drastic, yet it is not proposed to resort to prohibitions, but to establish efficacious tonnage duties prohibitive in the course of time. Every helpful expedient will be found necessary and perhaps indispensable. Tariff duties are omitted not because these are unimportant, but because it will be more convenient to consider them whenever the tariff itself may be under revision. Discriminating tariff duties may be considered as held in reserve.

The eternal principles of right—of justice toward other nations as well as duty to ourselves—should prevail throughout the act. Knowing what belongs to our notion by right, we should fearlessly claim it; aware of what belongs to others, we should in justice consider it. The ocean is for the use of all. Its monopoly should be permitted to none. Every convalescence has its time, every wise change of policy its period. Effects are better if gradually produced. It will apparently take many years to create and instate the marine and the merchants sufficient for our commerce with its rapid growth, we are so far behind.

Any measure to be thoroughly successful must be devised and enacted in view of perpetual application. To think of such protection to American navigation as will do its work as ever to be relaxed or suspended is not to reason from history. The British have to-day, and need it, as complete protection to their navigation as that established two hundred and fifty years ago. Our shipping legislation must, therefore, be persistent in character. Each section of the bill which this discussion refers to will now receive appropriate comment.

COMMENTS UPON THE BILL.

Section 1. A distinct departure is made in this section from our original system of trade regulation. It is desirable that our own vessels in direct trade with other countries, carrying cargoes of more than one-fourth capacity, be not subject to extra tonnage tax; therefore, if we would not wish to pay it we should not charge it; but if another country charges it, then we should do likewise. By this course we waive protection to direct import traffic, but do so to gain protection to export carriage, the more important in our case. At present foreign vessels are importing direct 46 per cent and indirect 54 per cent of what they bring. In early times indirect importing was in our own hands—that is to say, foreign vessels confined their work to direct trade—and from 1817 to 1828 we compelled them to do this. This section, like the others to follow, makes a regulation that we are willing to observe ourselves.

section, like the others to follow, makes a regulation that we are willing to observe ourselves.

Sec. 2. The intention of this section is to confine foreign vessels in our commerce to voyages from the countries to which they belong. Indirect traffic by them violates the rights of our own shipping and might be prohibited entirely, but an ample duty will in time substitute our own vessels for the foreign tonnage now in possession of our trade. The British Cunard Company has recently contracted with the Government of Austria-Hungary to bring all emigrants from that Kingdom to the United States in disregard of our right to reserve this traffic for our own vessels if Austria-Hungary can not furnish her share of this transportation. Our present shipping policy, violative of the rights of our maritime States, enables the Cunard Company thus to infringe the rights of our people. This policy cuts our own throat, for the emigrants constitute the cargo one way, and our exports furnish the cargo the other way. By securing the emigrant carriage our rivals also secure the export carriage, taking it from our own vessels.

It will be noted that in this section and in sections 3, 4, and 5 the discriminating duty is graduated, the smaller sizes of vessels paying the least and the larges rizes more per ton until the largest pays the most, in accordance with a well-known principle of transportation, which may be seen in practice not only in railway carriage, but on river, lake, and ocean. Ships four times the size of others can cut freights in two. On economic principles, therefore, vessels of 2,000 tons need twice the protection of those of 8,000 tons. If it be assumed that $5 per ton annual subvention will protect 2,000-ton vessels against those of equal or less size, then against those of 8,000 tons the protection should be $10 per ton, and against those of 16,000 tons the protection should be $20 per ton to preserve equality. It is believed that the duties need to be as high as set forth in this and following sections to be effectual in operation.

Sec. 3. The duties in this section are made lower than in the preceding section for the reason that it is less injurious to our shipping to come for cargo than to bring it, and the foreign ship can not so well pay the higher rates. There is no distant country that our vessels can afford to go to in ballast for cargo.

Sec. 4. The regulations in this section look to the prevention of such imposition upon our ships as now makes it impossible for them to secure employment in certain of our export trades, notably those of the Pacific coast, on account not only of British underwriting discriminations, but because of the bountied ships of France. These go out in ballast, the bounty being high enough to pay a profit outward whether cargo be taken or not. As we can not bounty our shipping, the only course open is handicapping by tonnage tax, unless we prohibit entrance. Proper mail and passenger steamers would not be affected by this section.

Section. 5. This section is intended to correct a great abuse. It has been a practice of speculators in transportation in British ports, particularly in Liverpool, to engage for months and even years ahead, and to order ships for it "chartered before arrival." No American ship ever got one of these charters, but in consequence of the practice many such have been thrown idle for months, until all the "ready chartered" foreign have arrived and loaded at full rates. This has been a great evil needing regulation in our Pacific ports for twenty-five years past. Sec. 6. With the "aid" of their Government, the French are becoming as bad as the British for violating our rights. Their great sailing ships can now come in ballast to our Atlantic ports and then go "seeking" from one side of the continent to the other, a thing no American ship can do, and this handicapping has become absolutely necessary. Our vessels can not go to a French port and get a pound of freight, and their underwriters discriminate against cargoes in them, following British example.

and their underwriters discriminate against cargoes in them, following British example.

SEC. 7. This regulation may be of use to our shipbuilders as setting a value on the privilege described. The Germans are the chief offenders against this rule, but there are others. This measure aims at making a fair chance to run steamers of our own to various countries, and every right must be justly exercised.

SEC. 8. We have charged no "light dues" for many years, but our vessels go nowhere abroad that they are free from this tax.

SEC. 9. Some of our rivals largely employ labor on their vessels but little above that of slaves, wages being merely nominal, to the great advantage of owners in meeting competition, and in justice to our own shipping this condition of things should have a special handleap.

Sec. 10. The increase in torming tax as proposed enables our shipping to render good seveles to our country in providing season of our own nationality, an object worth accomplishing. Fractically to most of our vessels the tax will be reduced.

Sec. 11. The fund created by this resultation, derivable mainly from 50 our vessels in the export trade. The revenue power is not exercised in raising this fund. The regulation is purely commercial, and the money will be better used for the object mentioned than in applying the money will be better used for the object mentioned than in applying the money will be better used for the object mentioned than in applying the money of directly encouraging this most important object. Vessel owners will receive nothing beyond the preference given, which will be well worth obtaining, since without it ruin may follow the tideness committee the cost of marine insurance and no doubt will be appreciated by exercised the cost of marine insurance and no doubt will be appreciated by exercise the cost of marine insurance and no doubt will be appreciated by exercise the cost of marine insurance and no doubt will be appreciated by exercise the cost of marine insurance and no doubt will be appreciated by exercise the cost of marine insurance and no doubt will be appreciated by exercise the cost of marine insurance and no doubt will be appreciated by exercise the cost of marine insurance and no doubt will be appreciated by exercise the cost of marine insurance and no doubt will be appreciated by exercise the cost of marine insurance and no doubt will be appreciated by exercise the cost of marine insurance and no doubt will be appreciated by exercise the cost of marine insurance and the cost of the exercise of t

11. In war time, and such times will come for many a year yet, it will always be advantageous to have at command of the Government a sufficiency of vessels for all purposes. In all our history there never was a time when we had such sufficiency, but had always to suffer for it. At all times we should be able to protect our interests on the sea, as on land, and for this the marine is only a little less useful than the Navy.

as on land, and for this the marine is only a little.

Navy.

12. There appears to be no reason why the passenger business should not contribute its element of power to the protection of our steam mail lines. It will be no hardship for a German, for instance, to come to the United States on a ship of his own fatherland, instead of taking passage on a French liner. Every nation should enjoy its own rights, every one should oppose shipping monopoly as dangerous to human freedom.

SEC. 14. The provisions of this section look to the possible abatement of the wily warfare of the British Lloyd's and other foreign the United States on a ship of his own fatherland, instead of taking passage on a French liner. Every nation should enjoy its own rights, every one should oppose shipping monopoly as dangerous to human freedom.

14. The provisions of this section look to the possible abatement of the willy warfare of the British Lloyd's and other foreign underwriters carried on for more than fifty years, to drive our ships from the sea, through a system of inequitable inspection and classification of vessels to prevent their employment. A vessel's employment is her breath of life. It depends very much upon her character in the underwriters' register. If a vessel's character can be depreciated or your rival's vessels, as a means of getting employment for your own, is a trick unworthy of civilized men. For a freight to be obtained at all, the rate must be cut as deep as 40 per cent, in the past, in California trade. The story of the guile, the greed, and ambition of our despoller is a long one. She has been the underwriter of the commerce of the world to the extent of three-fourths, and in such capacity rivals, she has gone far toward monopolizing, shipbuilding, navigation, and commerce. Underwriting is a branch of commerce, and marine insurance can be regulated as such in the manner provided in this section. Falling in the protection of our shipping against foreign underwriters in our own ports, our marine upbuilding would be like an area of the commerce of the world of the commerce of the commerce of the commerce of the world of the commerce of crastination, and that every considerate statesman regrets the maction of the past.

Note.—In this bill no provisions are made for the aid that tariff duties would afford to tonnage duties. This matter is left to be considered whenever the tariff may be under revision. The main feature of this measure is the application of discriminating tonnage duties to the recovery of the indirect carrying trade as the best thing to be done first. Should the pending subvention bill be passed, it will still be imperative to enact this measure as constituting more effective, and therefore indispensable, legislation.

In the House, December 5, 1906.

In the House, December 5, 1906.

Mr. Sulzer introduced the following bill; which was referred to the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries, and ordered to be printed:

A bill to regulate commerce with foreign nations; to make preference for the use of American freighting vessels; to extend the postal service by American steamships, and to promote American trade by Clause 1. On all vessels not exceeding 4,000 tons gross the additional duty shall be $2.25 per ton until the 1st day of January, 1909, after which date it shall be $2.25 per ton.

Clause 2. On all vessels between the sizes of 4,000 and 8,000 tons the additional duty shall be $2.75 per ton until the 1st day of January, 1909, after which date it shall be $3.25 per ton.

Clause 3. On all vessels between the sizes of 8,000 and 12,000 tons the additional duty shall be $3.25 per ton until the 1st day of January, 1911, after which date it shall be $3.25 per ton.

Clause 3. On all vessels between the sizes of 8,000 and 12,000 tons the additional duty shall be $3.25 per ton until the 1st day of January, 1909, after which date it shall be $4 per ton.

Clause 4. On all vessels between the sizes of 12,000 and 13,000 tons the additional duty shall be $3.25 per ton until the 1st day of January, 1909, after which date it shall be $4.25 per ton.

Clause 5. On all vessels between the size of 16,000 tons, the additional duty shall be $3.50 per ton until the 1st day of January, 1911, after which date it shall be $4.25 per ton.

Clause 5. On all vessels exceeding the size of 16,000 tons, the additional duty shall be $3.50 per ton until the 1st day of January, 1911, after which date it shall be $4 per ton until the 1st day of January, 1911, after which date it shall be $6.25 per ton.

Clause 6. But if the addition to coming as aforesaid, under engagement or making it after arrival, as above, a foreign vessel shall have held out to her by law the payment of bounty, subsi shall not be permitted by the collector to load cargo in a port of the United States.

Sec. 7. That a duty of 50 cents per ton on the gross admeasurement, in addition to the regular duty imposed on vessel tonnage by law, shall be levied and collected from every vessel that shall enter a port of the United States from a port of her own country, either with or without cargo, passengers, or mails, if she has not come direct, but has called or stopped on the way at a port of a country not her own and there, either in or off the port, has received merchandise, passengers, or mails, and the same shall be landed in the United States, unless said vessel has been built in the United States or is owned by citizens of the United States to the extent of 40 per cent, to be proved to the satisfaction of the collector and the district attorney of any United States court.

SEC. 8. That a tonnage duty, to be termed "light tax," of 3 cents per ton on the gross admeasurement of every merchant vessel not of the United States that shall enter a port of the United States shall be levied and collected, in addition to the duties required by preceding sections, before clearance for sea, except in case such vessel shall clear in ballast, or may have made port in distress or was built in the United States.

States.

SEC. 9. That a tonnage duty, to be termed "race tax," of 4 cents per ton, on the gross admeasurement of every merchant vessel not of the United States that shall enter a port of the United States and there discharge merchandise, passengers, or mails, shall be levied and collected, in addition to the duties required by preceding sections, if said vessel shall be manned to an extent exceeding 10 per cent of the crew by persons belonging to a different race of men from the owners of said vessel.

Sec. 10. That the regular tonnage tax referred to in preceding sections shall be paid by all vessels in the foreign trade, whether American or foreign, shall be hereafter collected on every entry and computed on the gross admeasurement. The present rates shall be increased from 6 cents to 10 cents and from 3 cents to 5 cents, respectively. American steamers carrying mails shall pay tonnage tax but once a year.

PART 2 .- EXPORT PREMIUMS.

Part 2.—Export Premiums.

Sec. 11. That all collections of tonnage duties and charges of every sort against vessels of every kind, whether regular or additional duties, light, race, and immigrant tax, entrance and clearance fees and permits provided by this and former acts to be levied, collected, and paid at the custom-house, and all fines, penalities, and forfeitures paid into the courts from violations of the navigation and revenue laws of the United States, this act included, shall, after the passage of this act, be set apart in the Treasury as a special fund from which to pay, first, for the support of marine hospitals for American seamen employed in the foreign trade, and, second, for the payment of premiums to exporters of merchandise for giving preference in the employment of vessels to those of the United States not in fact owned by themselves. No part of this fund shall ever be covered into the general Treasury, but be carried over.

Sec. 12. That on and after fifteen months from the passage of this act, there shall be paid, out of the special export fund in the Treasury provided for by section 11 of this act, to the bona fide owners and exporters of merchandise, the growth, production, and manufacture of the United States, to foreign countries not adjoining the United States, in vessels of the United States, registered pursuant to law, and not owned in fact by themselves, as follows: A premium of one-fourth of 1 per cent on the cash valuation of each shipment direct to a port, not less than 65 miles from the tidal or national boundary of the mainland of the United States; and a premium of one-half of 1 per cent on the cash valuation of each shipment direct to a port, not less than 400 miles from the port of departure in the United States; and a premium of three-fourths of 1 per cent on the cash valuation of each shipment direct to a port, not less than 1,000 miles from the port of departure in the United States; and a premium of 1 per cent on the cash valuation of each shipment direct to a port, not less than 2,000 miles from the port of departure in the United States; and a premium of 1½ per cent on the cash valuation of each shipment direct to a port not less than 3,000 miles from the port of departure in the United States; and a premium of 1½ per cent on the cash valuation of each shipment direct to a port not less than 4,000 miles from the port of departure in the United States; and a premium of 1½ per cent on the cash valuation of each shipment direct to a port not less than 5,000 miles from the port of departure in the United States; and a premium of 2 per cent on the cash valuation of each shipment direct to a port not less than 6,000 miles and upward from the port of departure in the United States. These premiums to an exporter shall be payable to his order upon report of the clearance of the vessel, with a statement of the collector of the port fixing the value of the shipment, which must be sworn to by an appraiser for the United States, within ten days, according to such regulations as the Secretary of the Treasury shall prescribe, distances between ports to be determined by the Hydrographic Office of the Navy Department and stated in sea miles.

PART 3 .- MAIL CARRIAGE.

cording to such regulations as the Secretary of the Treasury shall prescribe, distances between ports to be determined by the Hydrographic Office of the Navy Department and stated in sea miles.

SEC. 13. That the postal act approved March 3, 1891, be, and it is hereby, amended to provide and to read as follows:

Clause I. That the Postmaster-General shall, as often as once in each year, advertise for informal proposals for the carriage of malis by sea in American vessels between such ports of our own and otherments shall be inserted four times weekly in papers printed in Boston, New York, Philadelphia, Baltimore, New Orleans, Galveston, Norfolk, Charleston, Savannah, Mobile, San Francisco, Portland, and Seattle, describing the service as that of mail and naval vessels adapted to promate and seated of the control of the size and speed of vessels, number of trips yearly, remuneration required, time when service could be begun, and such other particulars as may seem useful for the Government to consider.

The Secretary of the Navy and the Postmaster-General shall together consider their contents, the wants of the Navy, and the needs of the postal service, and fix upon a schedule of requirements that will satisfy both interests. The Secretary of the Navy will control the plans for Interests. The Secretary of the Save will control the plans for programme, and the two together shall advertise formally to let contracts for the running of the vessels required for the line. Such advertisements shall be inserted in the same papers that called for informal proposals four times weekly describing the route, the character of sailing, and the time when the service shall begin. These requirements shall not be such that bidders can not be found. The Navy Department shall pay the cost of formal advertising. The letting of such contract shall be the same as hall be applicable to vessels. Every contract the same papers of the part of such contract that have the approval of the President, and none shall exceed the limit of thirty y circumstances in each case, and to the rate of compensation for similar service paid by other countries. Where a bid may be deemed too high the programme may be modified or the route readvertised, payment for services to be made at the end of each round voyage. If the contract shall fail to be fulfilled for six months, the President may declare it forfeited, and thereupon the route shall be readvertised and let to another bidder; but on no account shall the service be abandoned to other countries. Readvertising shall be done in a paper printed in Washington, D. C.

Clause 8. That upon each mail vessel the United States shall have transported, free of charge, one messenger, whose duty shall be to receive, sort, take in charge, and deliver the mails to and from the United States, and who shall be provided with suitable room for himself and for the mails.

Clause 9. That officers of the Navy may volunteer for service on mail vessels, and when accepted by the contractors may be assigned to such duty by the Secretary of the Navy whenever, in his opinion, such assignment can be made without harm to the service, and while in said employment they shall receive furlough pay from the Government and such other compensation from the contractors as may be agreed upon: Provided, That they shall be required to perform only such duties as pertain to the service.

Clause 10. That said vessels shall carry as cadets one American boy under 21 years of age for each 2,000 tons gross register, who shall be taught the duties of the service as seamen, rank as petty officers, and receive reasonable remuneration.

Clause 11. That said vessels may be taken and used by the Government as cruisers, scouts, or transports at any time, on payment to the owners of their fair actual value at the time of the taking, either for service by the voyage, by the month or year, or may be purchased outright, and if there shall be a disagreement as to the value, then the same shall be settled by two appraisers, one appointed by each party, they selecting t

PART 4 .- GENERAL PROVISIONS.

PART 4.—GENERAL PROVISIONS.

Sec. 14. That marine underwriters or insurance companies belonging abroad, in person or through acencies in the ports of the United States, may issue policies in conformity with State regulations, on shipments of goods, wares, and merchandise to be exported, but any discrimination made by them or their agents in the clauses of policies, in the premium rates, or effected through inspection of hulls or otherwise, which shall tend to favor the employment of foreign vessels or tend to disfavor the engagement of vessels of the United States, shall be deemed a misdemeanor punishable by a fine as a penalty in a district court of the United States. Said fine for the first offense shall not exceed $5,000 nor be less than $10,000, and for the third offense and each one afterwards said fine shall be not less than $10,000, and for the third offense and each one afterwards said fine shall be not less than $15,000 nor more than $25,000, and suits shall be prosecuted by the attorney of the court aforesaid for each and every violation of this section that may be brought to his notice. In any such suit it shall be no defense that the orders or directions of any person or the rules and regulations of any association of underwriters, shipowners, merchants, marine surveyors, or their agents, not citizens of the United States, or that the inspection or classification of any vessel by any person, society, or authority whatsoever, can be claimed to justify the discrimination that may have been the subject of complaint. A refusal to insure goods, wares, and merchandise under this act, to be carried by American vessels, shall forfeit the privilege of doing business in American ports or make the parties fineable as above, to be decided by the court.

Sec. 15. That in a time of peace it shall not be lawful for any officer of the Government to receive tenders of service to be performed by vessels not of the United States, and merchandise between the United States to import or land anywhere in the United States being the growth, production, or manufacture of a country contiguous to the United States, shall have been brought across the line from such country.

SEC. 17. That on and after the passage of this act it shall be lawful for the space of thirty months, but no longer, for any bona fide citizen, eftizens, or domestic corporation engaged in, or intending immediately to engage in, the carriage of merchandise, mails, or passengers in the foreign trade of the United States, to import and enter at the custom-house, for his or their own use and that of no other person or persons in said trade, and not to be held for sale or sold to others, and not to be employed in the domestic trade more than two months in the year, any vessel or vessels suitable therefor, of size not less than 2,000 tons gross, and of age not more than 5 years, and have the same duly registered as a vessel of the United States, but upon the following conditions, nevertheless, to wit: That all vessels imported in the first six months of the term of thirty months, as aforesaid, shall pay a duty of $4 per gross ton; those imported in the second six months shall pay a duty of $5 per gross ton; those imported in the third six months shall pay a duty of $6 per gross ton; those imported in the fourth six months shall pay a duty of $7 per gross ton; those imported in the fifth six months shall pay a duty of $8 per gross ton measurement. The Treasury Department may allow credit on duties for imported tonnage to the extent of six and twelve months' time on secured notes of owners, with interest at 2 per cent per annum. And it shall be unlawful, upon penalty as for a misdemeanor, punishable by fine of not

In addition to what has already been put in the RECORD, I desire, Mr. Chairman, to have printed as part of my remarks a very able article regarding the shipping industry in the United States by Hon. W. W. Bates, former United States Commissioner of Navigation, and president of the Shipping Society of America.

THE JUSTICE OF THE DEMAND FOR PROPER SHIP PROTECTION—CONGRESS WRONG IN CONTINUING THE PRESENT UNPROTECTIVE POLICY—OF BENEFIT TO A FEW FOREIGN NATIONS, BUT RUINOUS TO OUR-

By William W. Bates, ex-United States Commissioner of Navigation; author of American Marine and American Navigation, and president of the Shipping Society of America.

By the adoption of the Constitution the United States of America became a nation. One of the principal objects of this evolution was the development of the shipping trade and the maintenance of a merchant marine for the carriage of American commerce. The several States enjoyed political independence, but that would be greatly increased in consequence by taking on national life. Under wise government commercial independence would follow and prosperity be planted on firm and fertile ground. Unless this movement were made shipbuilding, navigation, and commerce would remain mostly in foreign hands, our political independence be insecure, and our people become a prey to the spoilers of shipless States, the foremost of these our "mother country." In point of fact, the shipping question pioneered the way for all that were solved, first, by the Revolution, then by the Constitutional Convention. Moreover, the earliest renown of our Republic in civil affairs was won by our merchant marine, appreciated and encouraged, as it was, to extend our commerce throughout the world.

OUR COMMERCIAL RIGHTS.

The British would gladly have saved us the trouble of exercising our rights of navigation and of developing commercial power. Their course was shaped to that end long before the Revolution, as ever since. Jefterson's Summary View of the Rights of America, written for the enlightenment of Congress in 1774, sets out the "encroachments and surpations attempted by the legislature of one part of the Empire upon those rights which God and the laws have given equally and in the pendent of the British Government, but the esteem for commerce and navigation cherished by the early mentors of our country:

"Some of the colonies having thought proper to continue the administration of their government in the name and under the authority of His Majesty King Charles I, " " the Parliament for the Commonwealth took the same in high offense, and assumed upon themselves the power of prohibiting their trade with all other parts of the world except the island of Great Britain. This arbitrary act, however, they soon recalled, and by solemn treaty, entered on the 12th day oncres, and the colony of Virginia, by their house of burgesses, it was expressly stipulated by the eighth article of the said treaty that they should have 'free trade as the people of England do enjoy to all places and with all nations, according to the laws of that Commonwealth. But that upon the restoration of His Majesty King Charles II their lights of free commerce fell once more a victim to arbitrary power, and by several acts of his reign, as well as some of his successors, the trade of the colonies was laid under such restrictions as show what its uncontrolled power admitted over these States. " " Besides the duties they imposed on our articles of export and import, they prohibit our going to any markets northward of Cape Finisterre, in the Kingdom of Spain, for the sale of commodities which Great Britain will not take from us and for the purchase of others with which she can not supply us, and that for no other than the arbitrary purposes of our rights and i

AN UNJUST ROYAL PROCLAMATION.

Under British law only British vessels could import merchandise from Asia, Africa, or America, or carry between the colonies. Some relaxation must be made or American vessels of the new flag could not trade with the "mother country," and, consequently, British vessels would have no right in American commerce. Our Government wanted a commercial treaty, but this was refused. A royal proclamation was issued annually, the home ports declared open, but those in the provinces and the West Indies closed—to vessels of the Stars and Stripes. A quintal of fish could not be landed from a boat. All intercourse must be British. Our country had no difficulty in getting desirable treaties with France, Holland, Sweden, and other countries, not only for commerce to home, but colonial ports. The peculiar course of Great Britain caused general study of our natural and international rights as a maritime nation, and determined the people more than ever to contend for their exercise. Only fair and equitable commerce was sought. We had no ambition to rival England in attempting a monopoly of navigation. We could do our own, and no nation should engross it.

The effect of the proclamation was to unite the States anew in the sentiment that American shipping rights must be specially protected against foreign encroachment. The subject was taken up in the Confederate Congress, and Mr. Jefferson headed a committee that reported in favor of asking the States for authority to enact such laws as would meet the policy of England. Full authority not being given to the General Government, each State for itself made such regulations of trade as seemed best, and we soon had a dozen systems of ship protection, necessarily in conflict, except in foreign trade. The need of a general system of navigation law soon became evident; among the motives for reforming the Government none were stronger - than that of securing the full exercise of every right on the sea as on the land.

THE CARRYING TRADE AN ESSENTIAL PART OF COMMERCE.

Our statesmen advanced no pretensions unfounded in reason and justice. They claimed that the carrying trade was an essential part of commerce—transportation going with trade. By prior right it belongs to the party originating the traffic, but the other has secondary right. No parties have rights of carriage where they have no interest in the cargo. American vessels have the right to carry American products to any country whose ports are open to their importation. In domestic commerce the carrying belongs to the vessels of American ownership. Where two nations have intercourse it belongs to their vessels and no others to do the transportation—"half and half"—others can not claim a just right of interposition. If one country has not the vessels, and the other has, then the whole carriage between them belongs to that one of necessity, and can not be justly claimed by any other. Rights of carriage are not obtainable by underbidding in rates of freight. That principle would justify a monopoly of navigation—a circumstance opposed to the rights and interests of mankind. However, a privilege may be granted the vessels of a country not concerned in the trading between others to carry the cargoes exchanged, but it is historic that if possible the carrying country will abuse its privilege and intercept and gain the trade of one or both. The only preventive is refusal of privilege and shipping of a country's own. A dependence on foreign shipping militates against fair prices for exports and imports not only, but the payment of freight to ships of other countries causes or increases balances of commerce against a country. Alexander Hamilton said: "To preserve the balance of trade (commerce) in favor of a nation ought to be a leading aim of its policy."

Mr. Williamson, of North Carolina, said in 1790: "By permitting foreigners to carry our produce for us, in order to pay for the fine goods they furnish us, we have to raise more from the soil by one-third than if we carried it ourselves. With such views so general, it is no wonder protective regulations were enacted. Those in force at the time of making and adopting the Constitution may be thus set out:

NAVIGATION LAWS OF THE STATES.

NAVIGATION LAWS OF THE STATES.

New Hampshire, Massachusetts, Rhode Island, Connecticut: Extraordinary tonnage duties on all foreign vessels; in first two States. American vessels free.

New York: Double duties on goods by British vessels; whether brought directly or through other States.

New Jersey: Tonnage duties, no other charges.

Pennsylvania: Tonnage duties—on ships of "treaty nations," 5s. 8d. per ton; on those of other nations, 7s. 6d. per ton. Discriminating tariff duties; on Asiatic goods, foreign merchants to pay 2 per cent extra; citizens to have a rebate of 5 per cent; teas direct from China in American vessels free, but dutied if brought indirect or by foreign vessels.

Maryland: Tonnage duty on British vessels, $1 per ton; upon French or Dutch, 66 cents per ton. American vessels, free.

Delaware: Tonnage duties.

Virginia: Discriminating tonnage duties—on French or Dutch vessels, 50 cents per ton; on British vessels, $1 per ton; American vessels, free. Brandy by American or French vessels, free; rum by British ships taxed. taxed.

North Carolina: Discrimination tonnage and tariff duties favoring ships, taxed.

North Carolina: Discrimination tonnage and tariff duties favoring American vessels.

South Carolina: Tonnage duty, 1s. 3d. per ton; 2 per cent ad valorem extra duty on goods in foreign bottoms.

Georgia: Tonnage duty, 1s. 8d. per ton on foreign vessels.

The discriminating duties of all the States, it was said in Congress, 1789, averaged nearly 60 cents per ton. A Virginia member said: "One dollar per ton on British vessels did not prevent their thronging the ports for cargoes." As British vessels came laden, the differential was too small for them. New York and Pennsylvania had the most effective systems, because of the differential on goods imported. Mr. Fitzsimons, of Pennsylvania, said in Congress, 1789, that "the British had established among us merchants, agents, and factors of their own, taking possession of our trade and furnishing vessels for its carriage. In some States the whole of their commerce was thus carried bn." Necessarily, in 1787, it was up to the founders of the Federal Government to devise a method of protection, which, in due time, should Americanize both our trade and transportation. Manifestly the method adopted by the States would have to be taken over, revised, and made effective, or some better way discovered.

Ship protection by Trade regulation.

SHIP PROTECTION BY TRADE REGULATION.

SHIP PROTECTION BY TRADE REGULATION.

In the plan of the Constitution reported to the convention by a committee appointed therefor, August 6, 1787, section 2 of Article VII—the second of "enumerated powers" to be granted to Congress—provided for the "regulation of commerce with foreign nations and between the States." This meant the taking over of the method of the States as to foreign nations, no other course appearing practicable. South Carolina and Georgia desiring for a time the continuance of African migration, their Delegates urged that without this stipulation their States would not adopt the Constitution. The convention was unprepared to adopt the idea, and the matter was referred to a special committee of eleven. General Pinckney contending for the passage of "navigation laws" by a two-thirds vote of each House only—this, too, was referred to the same committee, Livingston, of New York, chairman. He reported in favor of African migration until A. D. 1890. In the convention the figure was made 1808. When the report was again taken up Mr. Pinckney moved to postpone it in favor of his proposition—a two-thirds vote on navigation bills. A debate ensued. Mr. Pinckney did not carry his State. Only four States voted to postpone, whereupon the report which favored a majority vote was agreed to nem. con.—none dissenting.

EXTRACTS FROM THE DEBATE.

EXTRACTS FROM THE DEBATE.

General Pinckney conceived: "It was the true interest of the Southern States to have no regulation of commerce, and that the power of regulating commerce was a pure concession on their part," but withal he thought it proper that "no fetters should be imposed on the power of making regulations."

Mr. Clymer, of Pennsylvania, declared: "The Northern and Middle States will be ruined if not enabled to defend themselves against foreign regulations."

States will be ruined if not enabled to defend themselves against foreign regulations."

Mr. Sherman, of Connecticut, observed that "to require more than a majority to decide a question was always embarrassing, as had been experienced in certain cases in Congress."

Mr. Gouverneur Morris, of Pennsylvania, thought the object of the motion "highly Injurious." "Preferences to American ships will multiply them till they can carry the southern produce cheaper than it is now carried. A marine was essential to security, particularly of the Southern States, and can only be had by a navigation act encouraging American bottoms and seamen."

Mr. Williamson, of North Carolina, favored making two-thirds instead of a majority requisite, "as more satisfactory to the southern people."

people. Mr. Spaight, of Virginia, contended that "the Southern States could at any time save themselves from oppression by building ships for their own use."

Mr. Butler, of South Carolina, for good reasons, "would vote against the two-thirds proposition."
Colonel Mason, of Virginia, thought, as the Southern States were in the minority of interest, "it would be fair to guard against hasty regulations."

Mr. Wilson, of Pennsylvania, remarked: "If every peculiar interest was to be secured, unanimity ought to be required. The majority would be no more governed by interest than the minority."

THE STATESMANSHIP OF VIRGINIA

THE STATESMANSHIP OF VIRGINIA.

Mr. Madison, of Virginia, went into a pretty full exposition of the subject: "The disadvantage of the Southern States from a navigation act lay chiefly in a temporary rise of freight, attended, however, with an increase of southern as well as northern shipping; with the emigration of northern seamen and merchants to the Southern States, and with a removal of the existing injurious retallations among the States on each other. The power of foreign nations to obstruct our retallatory measures on them by a corrupt influence would also be less if a majority should be made competent than if two-thirds of each House should be required. * * * An abuse of the power would be qualified with all these good effects. But he thought an abuse was rendered improbable by the provision of two branches, by the independence of the Senate, by the negative of the President, by the interest of Connecticut and New Jersey, which were agricultural, not commercial States; by the interior interest, which was also agricultural in the most commercial States; by the accession of Western States, which would be altogether agricultural. He added that the Southern States would derive an essential advantage in the general security afforded by the increase of our maritime strength. He stated the vulnerable situation of them all, and of Virginia in particular. The increase of the coasting trade and of seamen would be favorable to the Southern States should in a still greater proportion be augmented, that wealth would contribute the more to the public wants and be otherwise a national benefit."

Mr. Rutledge, of South Carolina, opposed the motion of his col-benefit."

Mr. Rutledge, of South Carolina, opposed the motion of his colleague: "It did not follow from a grant of the power to regulate trade that it would be abused. At the worst, a navigation act could bear hard a little while only on the Southern States. As we are laying the foundation for a great empire, we ought to take a permanent view of the subject, and not look at the present moment only. He reminded the House of the necessity of securing the West India trade to this country. That was the great object, and a navigation act was necessary for obtaining it."

Mr. Randolph, of Virginia, favored the two-thirds proposition, but would not enter into the merits.

THE ULTIMATUM OF NEW ENGLAND.

Mr. Gorham, of Massachusetts, chairman of the committee of the whole, closed the debate as follows:

"If the Government is to be so fettered as to be unable to relieve the Eastern States, what motive can they have to join it, and thereby tie their own hands from measures which they could otherwise take for themselves? The Eastern States were not led to strengthen the Union by fear for their own safety. He deprecated the consequences of disunion, but if it should take place, it was the southern part of the continent that had the most reason to dread them. He urged the improbability of a combination against the interest of the Southern States, the different situations of the Northern and Middle States being a security against it. It was, moreover, certain that foreign ships would never be altogether excluded, especially those of nations in treaty with ds."

would never be altogether excluded, especially those of nations in treaty with its."

The foregoing debate has not been a matter of common knowledge. The proceedings of the Convention were kept secret for nearly fifty years. Very few libraries contain Madison's private record, first published in 1887. But now that our Government pretends to think itself 'so fettered" that it can not "relieve" any of our shipping States according to compact, it is high time that the American people understand the meaning in the Constitution of clause 3 of section 8, granting power to Congress in these words: "The Congress shall have power to regulate commerce with foreign nations, and among the several States, and with the Indian tribes." This power, as we have seen, was granted with unanimous assent, and was specifically intended to enable Congress to develop and maintain an American marine, by means of "navigation laws." Having arranged this grant, the States were divested of power to continue laying duties of tonnage or of tariff for the same purpose. (See sec. 10 of Art. I.) Thus was the protection of shipping given up by the States and taken over by the Federal Government—the whole matter arranged by the Convention—action which was afterwards ratified by the States and the people through the adoption of the Constitution. By this adoption the States were relieved of their natural duty to protect, and the United States, in virtue of the compact of union, promised and undertook the stipulated duty.

History tells us that Congress acknowledged the compact above described; exercised for a time the power confided to their trust; yea, are exercising part of this power to-day, and that the States have never interfered with this bounden duty. There can be no mistaing the nature of this compact and trust, so vital to the rights and interests of the maritime States. The Federal Constitution itself, in its entirety, has been styled "a compact between the States by which it was ratified." The Confederation which the Union supplanted was

All went well with the American marine while the regulations for its encouragement were carried out in good faith—until a faithless change of policy, from protection to unprotection, was made, 1828, the object being to conciliate Great Britain and induce her to open her

West Indian ports, closed to our vessels in 1783. Great Britain always resented our ship protection. She had the best in the world for herself, but it was her conceit that no other nation had any business on the ocean. It was a serious mistake to suppose that any policy whatever would induce her Parliament and people to change their course of imposition with respect to "foreign" shipping. Our sacrifice was in vain—nevertheless Congress continues it.

of imposition with respect to "foreign" shipping. Our sacrifice was in vain—nevertheless Congress continues it.

THE "RECIPROCITY" ACT OF 1815.

In his message of December, 1821, President Monroe sketched the object of the act of 1815, permitting "reciprocity" in direct trade, being the basis for the British convention of that year. Even this first step, so far as it withdrew protection, conflicted with the compact of union. Said President Monroe:

"By an act of the 3d of March, 1815, * * * a proposition was made to all nations to place our commerce with each on a basis which, it was presumed, would be acceptable to all. Every nation was allowed to bring its manufactures and productions into our ports and to take the manufactures and productions of the United States back to their ports, in their own vessels, on the same conditions that they might be transported in vessels of the United States; and in return it was required that a like accommodation should be granted to the vessels of the United States in the ports of other powers. The articles to be admitted or prohibited on either side formed no part of the proposed arrangement. * * *

"When the nature of the commerce between the United States and every other country was taken into view, it was thought that this proposition would be considered fair and even liberal by every power. * * By placing, then, the navigation precisely on the same ground as the transportation of exports and imports between the United States and evised which would retain even the semblance of equality in our favor."

This act applied to direct trade only. British vessels could not bring goods from France or other foreign countries. As a vital protection, it left the indirect trade closed to foreign shipping. It was devised to appease England, and but for her insistence would not have had existence. If was hurtful in removing discriminating duties—the inducement for foreign merchants to freight our vessels homeward.

Indirect receiprocity. Understable.

In 1822 Norway, then having direct

Inducement for foreign merchants to freight our vessels homeward.

INDIRECT RECIPROCITY UNDESIBABLE.

In 1822 Norway, then having direct "reciprocity," opened her ports to our vessels from whatever place arriving and with whatever articles laden, and requested reciprocation. President Monroe referred the matter to Congress. This would have been a reversion of policy incompatible with the constitutional compact, and had been rejected for inadmissibility in 1815. President Monroe said:

"I have presented thus fully to your view our commercial relations with other powers, that seeing them in detail with each power and knowing the basis on which they rest, Congress may, in its wisdom, decide whether any change ought to be made, and if any, in what respect. If this basis is unjust or unreasonable, surely it ought to be abandoned; but if it be just and reasonable and any change in it will make concessions subversive of equality and tending in its consequences to sap the foundations of our prosperity, then the reasons are equally strong for adhering to the ground already taken and supporting it by such further regulations as may appear to be proper should any additional support be found necessary."

In its wisdom, Congress did not touch the subject of indirect reciprocity, but held Monroe's view—until Adams came into office.

THE BUINOUS RECIPROCITY ACT OF 1828.

This act grew out of an act of Parliament in this way: The idea of the Norwegian proposition was adopted by England in 1825, when a law provided, if the United States would admit to her ports the vessels of Great Britain with cargoes from any country, on the same footing as American vessels—no protection by discriminating duties on either side—then Great Britain would open her West Indian ports to American vessels with American produce. Congress would not accept a proposition so unfair. John Quincy Adams's predecessors would have disapproved a fair proposition for indirect reciprocity, but he unreasonably concluded that if Congress made a return proposition entirely fair it would be accepted and the long controversy would be ended. The act was passed, but England paid no attention to it for twenty-one years. In 1830 the West India ports were opened on other grounds, a special act being passed. Various nations took early advantage of our new policy, which was calculated to help their shipping and hurt our own, as statistics show.

In 1849 England made such changes in her laws as permitted reciprocation on the basis of our act, and in four years' time we lost of our import carriage 10 per cent and in twelve years over 21 per cent. With eighteen other countries benefiting from Adams's policy, we had by 1850 lost 13 per cent of import carriage and of export carriage about 9 per cent. Under this policy, down to the civil war, we lost carriage as shown by this comparison: 1827, import carriage, 72.1.

At this rate of decline we would have been where we are now had the war never come; it destroyed 38 per cent of our carriage; and nothing has been done by Congress toward its restoration. On the contrary, the policy responsible for the extinction of our shipping trade has been maintained as a sacred thing, no more to be disturbed than the foundations of religious belief. This policy, instituted to placate Great Britain, seems to be maintained in a spirit of abject submission, though cent of what they import for us is brought to be contention of two hundred and fifty years for the carriage of our commerce has been well repaid. We stand defeated and disgraced and appear to feel contented. We have only to repeal our act of 1828 and terminate the conventions under it, now time-expired and equities preterlapsed, to regain our former position as to all foreign shipping. But after forty years of delay there is nothing to show that, if our last ton of shipping in foreign trade was at the bottom of the ocean, Congress would do a thing in the way of protection to cause its replacement—nothing but to reject impracticable propositions for ship subvention, subsidy, or bounty.

The ONLY LOGICAL AND EFFECTUAL REMEDY.

The policy of unprotected transportation was experimental. It was not intended by Congress to sacrifice our marine or to lessen our carriage, though it was felt that chances were being taken. It was even contended that "free trade" would secure a larger share of proportionate carriage, but if the policy proved detrimental our conventions could be terminated and we could return to protection by giving a year's notice after ten years of trial.

Some European nations under the stress of unprotection having instituted bounty and subsidy systems (contrary to the equities of our conventions), it is proposed to follow their example and make the tax-payers of the United States put up money for the support of our marine. The warrant for this course is not found in the Constitution, and foreign examples can not be recognized as competent authority. It is illogical, being no way related to the cause of our difficulty, which is the suspension of our protective navigation laws, solemnly agreed upon and provided under the Constitution, of which said suspension was a perfidious breach. Our shipowners or others desirous of becoming shipowners, nor any of our maritime States, have any ground to stand on in demanding of the Government and the people that gratuities of any kind be paid for the support of a merchant marine. The shipping trade is but one of a thousand of the employments of our people, not one of them having any right whatever to call upon the Treasury for money wherewith to exist. The protection to industries provided in the Constitution is seated in the regulation of foreign commerce and nowhere else. It is not even in the power to lay duties for revenue. That is one thing, but the regulation of commerce is distinctly another thing, involving the exercise of a different power.

THE CONSTITUTIONAL DEMAND.

distinctly another thing, involving the exercise of a different power.

THE CONSTITUTIONAL DEMAND.

But the maritime States and the people in interest have a ground of demand on the Government, absolutely solid, for protection to shipping. This is the compact for a performance of its accepted duty; the honoring of its special engagement—the execution of the covenant for navigation laws. This and this only can be demanded. This and this only is logical or will prove effectual. Henceforth it will be insisted on and urged as just and expedient. Say nothing of the national interest, the shipping trade, as a very important industry, has a right to bread. Congress does a deep injustice to offer a stone. Unregulated commerce, with any amount of subsidy, subvention, or bounty, is no equivalent whatever for conditions prior to 1828. Those conditions were not only economical but political. Our ports were closed to foreign indirect traffic. Foreign vessels had no more show then for indirect trade in competition with ours than they have now in our domestic trade. Against foreign indirect trade we had protection by prohibition. All subsidy and bounty bills look to keeping this trade open and giving it no protection at all. The donation policy only squints at protection. There are conditions are essential factors in running American vessels. They must be restored or there will never be an American marine adequate for American commerce; but in the interest and for the benefit of foreign nations we shall be forever a dependent on the ocean, virtually in subjection to the shipping powers, who will grow, strengthen, and fatten on the profits of our great and increasing commerce. The shipping society of America, exercising what influence it may have, has but one demand to make, and that, as in duty bound, it will ever urge the observance by Congress of the Constitution in this important matter of ship protection. If Congress will not act its part it should at least acknowledge failure and offer to resign its authority and set the

I also desire to print, Mr. Chairman, in this connection an interview published in the Philadelphia North American a year or so ago which speaks for itself, and proves that I have not changed my opinion regarding the proper kind of legislation to restore the American merchant marine to its former prestige:

Representative William Sulzer, of New York, was seen last night the Stratford-Bellevue Hotel talking to some old friends of this

"I just dropped in on my way home from Washington," said Mr. SULZEE, "to see a few of my old friends in Philadelphia, especially that genial poet, Larry McCormick, who keeps the best hotel in the world."

"I haven't a word to say about politics—wait until the fight begins."

Sulzer, "to see a few of my old friends in Philadelphia, especially that genial poet, Larry McCormick, who keeps the best hotel in the world."

"I haven't a word to say about politics—wait until the fight begins."

"Yes," continued Mr. Sulzer, "I expect the next Congress to be a busy one, and I hope it will meet the expectations of the people and pass some of the bills the people favor. I want to see the next Congress do something for our merchant marine. It is a very important subject, and has been neglected too long. We must do something quickly to regain our oversea carrying trade.

"You remember," continued Mr. Sulzer, "that at the beginning of the first session of the last (the Fifty-eighth) Congress a joint committee was appointed to investigate the cause of the decline of our merchant marine, and instructed to recommend to the next session legislation to restore our former glory in oversea carrying trade. I voted for the resolution to appoint that committee, and when I did so I indulged the hope that the bright day was not far distant when something more than empty words and hollow promises would be done for the shipping interests of the United States.

"At last I thought that now something is going to be done in a businesslike way for our merchant marine. That joint committee met, organized, and held sessions in all the large cities of the country during the summer and fall of 1904. The committee called many witnesses and took a great deal of testimony, which testimony was filed at the beginning of the last session of the Fifty-eighth Congress with the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries. The committee made an elaborate report, but the most luminous mind in the country can not comprehend what it means or recommends. And the bill that was reported with it was a trust bill—a bill that can not be passed, a subsidy bill—to rob the many for the benefit of the few. The whole thing was a farce, and nothing was done for our merchant marine. The time for final adjournment arrived, and legislation for our posed to subsidies. I am opposed to robbing the many for the benefit of the few. I stand now and have always stood on this question just where President McKinley stood when he said:

"We must encourage our merchant marine. We must have more ships. They must be manned by and owned by Americans. The policy of discriminating duties in favor of our shipping which prevailed in the early years of our history should be again promptly adopted by the Congress and vigorously supported until our prestige and supremacy on the seas are fully attained.

"I have given much study to this subject," continued the Congressman, "and in my opinion a subsidy bill can not pass Congress. It has been tried over and over again, and has always failed. Such a bill, I say, can never pass Congress. I know a bill along the lines of discriminating duties can. It is our old and true policy and the only feasible remedy.

With 7,000,000 inhabitants, owned more registered tonnage for over-sea carrying trade than the United States of 1905, with a population of 80,000,000. In 1810 we had 981,000 tonnage, It is now 873,000, and worse still, the record showed an actual decrease of 6,000 tons last year. In 1810 American ships, manned by American sailors, carried 91.5 per cent of their country's ocean trade, and, moreover, a great share of that of Europe.

"In 1861, though we had already lost our Atlantic steam lines and our shipbuilding was failling off, we still carried 65.2 per cent of our own trade and some of the trade of other nations; but American ships last year conveyed only 8.8 per cent of our own imports and exports. Our registered tonnage in 1861 stood 2,496,000. It stands now at 873,000. More than two-thirds of our once great and powerful deepsea fleet has vanished, and not one new keel for an ocean ship is being laid on either our Atlantic or Pacific coast line; and, meanwhile, an ever-increasing fleet of foreign vessels for conveying our freights and pasengers over $200,000,000 a year. Much of this vast sum of money goes to steamers whic

"I shall reintroduce my bill on the first day of the next Congress and do all in my power to pass it. If I can get some help from the Republicans, it will pass and become a law; and if it does, the problem will be solved and our merchant marine will be restored and American ships flying the American flag, manned by American sailors, will again be seen on every sea and in every port throughout the world."

Mr. Chairman, I also desire to print in the RECORD, as a part of my remarks, some data in connection with this matter, and referring particularly to the Shipping Society of America.

THE SHIPPING SOCIETY OF AMERICA—CAUSE OF ITS FORMATION AND ACTIVITY, ITS OBJECTS, PRINCIPLES AND ORGANIZATION.

To the people of the United States:

To the people of the United States:

The undersigned promoters, citizens of different States, desirous of securing our rights on the ocean, beg leave to address the public on the subject or our ocean-carrying trade, and to call the attention of Congress to certain facts that should be considered in relation thereto.

First. That this trade, essential to our commercial prosperity and national advancement, has been ruined by the present disadvantageous policy of "maritime reciprocity," and that under it, considering the experience of the past forty years, there is no probability that it will ever recover the ground once held under the fostering policy instituted in 1789, nor unless our Government returns to that policy, which was suspended in 1828, and conventions made since with foreign nations, whereby their shipping has flourished while ours has perished.

Second. That it is undisputed that in the constitutional convention it was declared and acknowledged that an essential condition of the Union then to be formed was the empowering of Congress to regulate our foreign commerce so that we might maintain an American marine. Failing this stipulation, the Constitution would lack advantage to the shipping States and would therefore be rejected. It was then and there agreed that "navigation laws" for the protection of shipping should be enacted by the Federal Government in lieu of those existing in most of the States, which would necessarily be made void. This agreement became a compact between the several States and the United States, which Congress has no right to nullify or set aside in the interest of foreign nations, and which good faith requires shall ever be honestly observed. Thus it was our shipping policy was settled by the Constitution not to be defenseless, but protective in character.

Third. Notwithstanding the express covenant of the convention, ratified and stipulated in clause 3 of section 8 of Article I of the Constitution, concerning the regulation of foreign commerce, in 1815 the Government usurpe

This consequence is not astonishing, but might have been logically expected from the greatly increased competition created by giving foreign vessels in our trade a footing the same precisely as our own, whether they brought goods from their own or other countries. Built up and defended by discriminative regulations, our marine has perished from their suspension. Manifestly it is unjust to the shipping interest and of continuous damage to the country to pursue a policy fraught with such results, and it must be reformed.

Fourth. Our Government had no warrant in law or equity for depriving the shipping States, or their people, of even the least particle of the project of the constitution, proposed for the short period of "ten years."

The rights of our shipping have been ignored, the privileges of foreign shipping continued, and our shippowners, instead of being protected in their rights by navigation laws according to compact, have been made objects of liberality for a short time. Americans it is not project of the Constitution, proposed for the short period of "ten years."

4. A legislative committee of fifteen shall be chosen from the executive committee.

5. An expert subcommittee of five shall be chosen from the legislative committee to formulate the shipping legislation which the society will support. Three of the five may report it to the legislative committee, and after consideration, nine of the legislative committee may report it to the executive committee for introduction to Congress.

6. The officers shall consist of a president and two vice-presidents; secretary and two assistant secretaries; treasurer, organizer, and assistants as may be necessary. Until the council shall choose permanent officers, those serving will be officers pro tempore, appointed by the promoters of the society. All the pro tempore and permanent officers must be members of the council.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order on

Mr. KEIFER. Well, we had better dispose of the point of order first.

Mr. MANN. I am perfectly willing.

Mr. KEIFER. I don't know what the gentleman's point of order is.

Mr. MANN. The point of order is that an amendment of this sort upon this bill is not in order, because it is neither the improvement of a river or a harbor. That matter was settled years ago in the case of the Hennepin Canal. The point of order was sustained by the Chairman at that time, that it was not in order upon a river and harbor bill on the ground that the Hennepin Canal was not an improvement of a river or a harbor, and the item went out on the point of order. I take it this is substantially the same thing. If it were for the improvement of a river, very well; but this is for the improvement of a ship canal to connect two bodies of water, and not an improvement of a river and not an improvement of a harbor.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman insist upon his point of order?

Mr. MANN. I do.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

I am perfectly willing to reserve the point of order if the gentleman desires to be heard, but he insisted upon its being disposed of first.

The CHAIRMAN. It is perfectly clear to the Chair that this is not within the jurisdiction of this committee.

Mr. MANN. I will reserve the point of order in order that the gentleman may be heard.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. KEIFER. Mr. Chairman, I supposed that as we were dealing with matters that were connected with the building of a ship canal from Chicago to the Mississippi, and thence to the Gulf, that we were dealing with a bill that almost anything relating to water courses and water transportation was proper upon. Mr. Chairman, I offered this amendment in good faith. I want at least to give notice so that we may not hear in the years to come, as we have heard with reference to some Illinois projects, that this is a new thing. I will remind the committee that the first suggestion with reference to the building of this canal to connect the water of Lake Erie with the water of the Ohio was made by a now obsolete gentleman of the past, Mr. George Washington. The second to advocate this, even before the adoption of the Constitution of the United States, was the adoption of the Constitution of the United States, was the man whose name has been so frequently used, if not abused, called Thomas Jefferson, the father of Democracy. All along down the line it has been insisted that the most important internal improvement was the connection of the Lakes with the Ohio River, so that commerce can pass thence through the Ohio and the Mississippi to the Gulf. If this amendment could have been put in this bill and the surrous reads it reveals because the could be a contraction of the Could be contracted by the could be a contracted by the could be contracted by the country of the could be contracted by the could be contracted by the country of the could be contracted by the country of the count have been put in this bill and the survey made it would be found entirely practicable. There are now reservoirs and work all along the line, and it would be cheap compared to other ship canals that we are building—cheap because it would connect more people who live on the shores of the Lakes with the other parts of the country, and with the world, than there were in this country at the time that the Constitution of the United States was adopted. The great cities of Chicago, Detroit, Cleveland, Buffalo, if you please, and Toledo could sail their vessels through this proposed ship canal to the Ohio, and thence to the Gulf, and thence anywhere in the world.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, if I may have unanimous consent to make a statement, I will say to my colleague that the possible routes for a canal from the Ohio River to the Lakes were very elaborately surveyed some years ago and a report made in 1896, which appears in the Engineer's reports for that year. It gives the most complete and accurate data in regard to these prospective routes between the river and the Lakes that is anywhere available.

Mr. KEIFER. That was not an unfavorable report, but it was merely connected with and applied, I think, to the canal system.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. Substantially so. The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read, The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. Not unless there is prospective traffic of some value. The survey already made of this river makes it probable you would not have water enough for slack-water navigation. Then another thing, if we attempt to construct locks and dams to the extent which would be indicated by adopting this, the contracting force of the whole country might as well stop all other classes of work and attend to constructing locks and dams.

Mr. GARRETT. I want to ask if there is any fixed tonnage you have as a basis?

Mr. GARRETT. There is no fixed tonnage as a basis?

Mr. GARRETT. Did you take into consideration the character of the stream as well as its fixed tonnage?

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. This is a stream which is not at all in a class with those where we have provided for locks and dams, and very few even approaching it have been surveyed. In those cases where surveys have been made the report has been unfavorable.

All surveys and examinations provided for by this act, and the reports thereon, shall either be completed on or before the first Monday in November, 1908, or else a preliminary report be made in which the reasons for delay shall be stated: Provided, That all reports of preliminary examinations and surveys which may be prepared during the recess of Congress, and be ready for printing, shall, in the discretion of the Secretary of War, be printed by the Public Printer as documents of the following session of Congress.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order upon the paragraph. I would like to ask the chairman whether this is the paragraph that is in the existing law? How does the Secretary of War print a document of the House of Representatives during the recess?

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. He can do that and have it filed at the beginning of the session. There is a similar provision in the law of 1905, or, perhaps, the same provision. It is extremely desirable for this reason: With many of these reports there is a map or plat. Should the filing of that report, including the map, be delayed until the first of the session, it will not come to the House from the Public Printer in its completed form for thirty days, or even more, so that the delay in the printing of the maps and presentation of the document in its entirety creates a

Mr. MANN. Well, they can do that; but, as I said, they print it as a document, and a document has a number.

Mr. HULL. They give the number to all the documents.

Mr. MANN. The President's message is printed as a document and various other things come into Congress at the beginning of the session that are ordered printed. These must be the first ones ordered printed. The first document printed is Document No. 1. If this has worked all right, I have nothing

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. It has worked well. I only looked to the essential feature of its operation and not to the nonessential point, relating to the number.

Mr. MANN. But the nonessential is frequently very essential in so far as the administration feature is concerned. withdraw the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

Sec. 4. That the compilation of laws of the United States relating to the improvement of rivers and harbors authorized by section 13 of the river and harbor act of June 13, 1902, and joint resolution of Congress approved February 1, 1905, shall be extended to include all such laws enacted up to the close of the second session of the Fifty-ninth Congress; and 3,000 copies of this compilation shall be printed under the direction of the Secretary of War, of which 600 copies shall be for the use of the Senate, 1,400 copies for the use of the House, and 1,000 copies for the use of the office of the Chief of Engineers, United States Army.

Mr. MANN. I reserve the point of order on that. Who made this compilation?

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. It is made at the War Department. The work has already been done and a provision was made for it in the act of 1902; but there is, as I understand, a law which provides that unless documents ordered by Congress are filed within a year after the passage of the statute or resolution providing for them they shall not be printed. They did not have this ready until after the expiration of the year, so they brought it down to date and will have it ready for publication. These facts make necessary this provision. The work upon it has substantially all been done.

Mr. MANN. I thought they issued a compilation a little while ago.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. It is not the same thing. The one to which the gentleman refers is a list of the surveys, projects, and appropriations, but this proposed compilation gives the statutes relating to rivers and harbors, and I think it will prove very valuable.

Mr. MANN. I withdraw the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. MANN. I withdraw the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

Sec. 6. That those members of the International Waterways Commission created in accordance with section 4 of the river and harbor act of June 13, 1902, who represent the United States shall have power, and it shall be their duty, to investigate and report upon the conditions and uses of the waters adjacent to the boundary lines between the United States and Canada, and of waters flowing from the United States into Canada or from Canada into the United States, and of the tributaries of such waters; also upon the maintenance and regulation of suitable levels; and also upon the effect upon the shores of these waters and the structures thereon and upon the interests of navigation by reason of the diversion of these waters from c change in their natural flow; and, further, to report upon the necessary measures to regulate such diversion, and to make such recommendations for improvements and regulations as shall best subserve the interests of the Secretary of War, locate the boundary line upon international waters between Canada and the United States as heretofore established, wherever the same is not clearly defined or wherever for any other reason a relocation is desirable, and shall prepare a series of modern charts upon which it shall be delineated; they shall also recommend the erection of such monuments as they may deem necessary to enable such boundary line to be accurately ascertained. Mr. MANN. I make the point of order against section 6.

Mr. KEIFER. I desire to offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman make or reserve the point of order?

Mr. MANN. I am perfectly willing to reserve the point of

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. I think we had better have a decision of the Chair as to whether it is in order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. I do not know that I object, but I shall desire to offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. If the Chair can have the attention of the committee

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. The section as it stands is clearly subject to the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has not examined the section very closely, but the Chair feels very certain that a proposition to give power to a boundary line commission on an international water course is not within the jurisdiction of the committee. If the chairman of the committee desires to offer an amendment, the Chair will first recognize him.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. I desire to offer as a substitute for that the first four lines of section 6 and the last two and a half lines at the end of the section; so as it will read:

That those members of the International Waterways Commission, created in accordance with section 4 of the river and harbor act of June 13, 1902, who represent the United States shall have power to rent such room or rooms in Washington as shall be necessary for the performance of the duties intrusted to them.

Mr. MANN. I reserve the point of order on that. The CHAIRMAN. The amendment has not yet been read. The Clerk read as follows:

Insert in lieu of the matter stricken out:
"That those members of the International Waterways Commission, created in accordance with section 4 of the river and harbor act of June 13, 1902, who represent the United States, shall have power to rent such room or rooms in Washington as may be necessary for the performance of the duties intrusted to them."

Mr. MANN. I reserve the point of order on that.

Mr. KEIFER. I want to offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman can not offer an amendment until the point of order is disposed of.

Mr. MANN. Then I withdraw the point of order.
The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois withdraws the point of order. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. Keifer] to offer an amendment.

Mr. Keifer. Not to the pending amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. Burton].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. KEIFER. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment to the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr, Keifer] offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add to the bill:

"Sec. 7. The several appropriations made by section 1 of this act are made subject to the right of the Secretary of War, with the approval of the President of the United States, to appoint a board of inspection, consisting of three engineer officers of the United States Army not lower in rank than captain, which board shall, if deemed necessary by the Secretary of War, with like approvel, visit any place he may designate which it is proposed by the provisions of this act to improve and there fully investigate the same and report in writing to the Secretary of War as to the public necessity, utility, and practicability of the proposed improvement at the place so designated, and whether or not such improvement will, if made, result in substantial public benefit in promoting interstate or foreign trade or commerce, stating in a summary way the facts, if any, which in its opinion may tend to show such necessity, utility, and practicability and such public benefit, and setting forth as to each place designated its situation and condition in respect to such trade or commerce by water transportation at the time the report is made and what its situation and condition would be, in such respect, should the proposed improvement be made; also showing in what way, if any, the general public, through increased trade or commerce, will be benefited; also showing how the common defense or general welfare will be promoted, if at all, by the proposed expenditure of money at such place, and setting forth such other things relating to such expenditure as the Secretary of War may deem important and require."

"Any such board appointed as aforesaid shall separately investigate and report on each place designated as aforesaid and referred to it for investigation; and more than one such board may be in existence at the same time.

"Upon the receipt of a report from such board the Secretary of War, with the appropriated by this act for such

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina reserves the point of order on the amendment.

Mr. KEIFER. Mr. Chairman, this is an amendment in the nature of a limitation, and is very usual in some form or other. It is intended to save the money of the United States if the Secretary of War, with the approval of the President of the United States, shall find in his judgment that it is necessary to make examination of places appropriated for under section 1 of this bill. It requires the Secretary to have the approval of the President before he appoints a board to go to investigate and find out whether the proposed improvement will be a public benefit. This has been carried out without such a provision of law, by Presidents of the United States without regard to party, in the past. But such provisions have been offered before. If it should turn out that the Secretary of War discovers that it is wise to spend a few thousand dollars for the purpose of ascertaining the probable benefit of the important things that are proposed in this bill, he is authorized to do so. Take, for example, that great river, the Choctawhatchee River in Alabama, where the engineers are directed to go and survey, with a view of getting, for the purposes of national commerce, a depth of water of 3 feet, running up somewhere, with a possibility that when that is found the ships of the world may sail in and engage in national commerce. Or take others. On page 101 is a proposition; the North Edisto River from its mouth to Orange-burg, with a view to obtaining 3 feet of water. Is this national in character? Is this to be that kind of an improvement that the chairman of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors regards as of great public utility? If it is, it is on the theory that we may build anything to a place where we can hope to build up some sort of trade or commerce. I will find a dozen or more places in my district where, if you will build a railroad less than 10 miles long, we will build up more commerce than you will get on some twenty of the projects of this kind contained in this bill. Why should not the Government build railroads, or turnpikes, or something of the kind for the purpose of building up commerce and navigation?

Mr. FINLEY. Mr. Chairman-

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Ohio yield?

Mr. KEIFER. Oh, yes.

Mr. FINLEY. I wish to ask the gentleman if this amendment to the amendment is limited to surveys?

Mr. KEIFER. Oh, no; it is not limited to that at all. It is limited to nothing but those projects that are appropriated for in the bill. It does not affect surveys at all. I only re-ferred to those matters that are mentioned under the head of surveys because I believe the policy of the great committee is to open the way for those great commercial things that are to arise from 3 feet of water in some inlet or little river.

Mr. FINLEY. Mr. Chairman, as I understand the gentleman, his amendment does not affect the surveys only, but goes to other matters in the bill.

Mr. KEIFER. It does not go to the surveys; only to the appropriations mentioned in section 1 of the bill. The Secretary of War is not obliged to avail himself of the provisions at all. It is wholly left to his discretion, as with about all the original appropriations for rivers and harbors.

Mr. FINLEY. Mr. Chairman, that is a long amendment, but, as I caught the reading, it contains legislation and is much more than a limitation.

The CHAIRMAN. It is not a limitation; it is legislation.

I insist on my point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. But the gentleman must recollect that the river and harbor bill is not a general appropriation bill within the meaning of clause 2, Rule XXI. Legislation is proper on a river and harbor bill, and the Chair overrules the point of order.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I desire to be heard just a moment. In the first place, my colleague is wrong in his understanding of the facts relating to river and harbor im-We already have a board of five members that review all surveys before they are considered by Congress at all, and every precaution which would be accomplished by his measure is obtained through the instrumentality of that board.

This contention is one for the careful consideration of Con-It proposes in a word that a bill shall be introduced here, that Congress shall deliberate upon it and pass it, and then we shall pursue the unprecedented course of creating a board that shall decide whether the law passed, the appropria-tions made by Congress, shall be executed or not. I do not think this House or this committee desires to listen to such a proposition as that. That is all I care to say, and I ask for a vote.

Mr. KEIFER. Mr. Chairman, it is very easy to set aside a matter by making a general remark about it and saying in effect that we are invading the powers of Congress; but I think there is no river and harbor appropriation bill, or anything relating to one, in the first fifty or sixty years of this country that was not left substantially in the discretion of the Secretary of War and the President as to the mode and manner and probably the final expenditure of the money. Later on, notwith-standing the boards of engineers, such Presidents as Grant and Cleveland looked into the matter, and if they saw what they deemed was a useless expenditure of money they withheld its expenditure altogether in certain instances.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield for a question? Mr. KEIFER. Yes.

Mr. MANN. From a casual listening to the amendment as read, I judge that it provided that no portion of the money appropriated for improvements should be expended until after a commission or the board appointed by the Secretary of War had examined the project.

Mr. KEIFER. There is no such provision in the amendment at all, and nothing like it.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman from Ohio state what his amendment does cover?

Mr. KEIFER. I will state, if I can, what is plainly written in the amendment, that the amendment leaves it within the discretion of the Secretary of War, with the approval of the President of the United States, to appoint a board and order it to examine any particular place, but there is no limitation unless he chooses to exercise that power on any of the appropriations. There is none whatever, and none is proposed. But if it should turn out that this great commission or board that is followed sometimes by the great Committee on Rivers and Harbors and repudiated in many more instances, if it should turn out that it had made a mistake, and this committee should happen to indorse its action and thousands of dollars were appropriated for the purpose of building up trade and commerce where none existed, and that there could not be any trade and commerce there if the money appropriated for the particular place was expended, then it could order a board, such as the amendment provides for, to examine into it.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield for another question?

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman's proposition is this: That the Mr. MANN. The gentleman's proposition is this: That the War Department or the Engineer Department having reported with the project having been brought to against a project and then the project having been brought to Congress, and Congress having adopted the project, Congress proposes to turn it over to the Secretary of War to ascertain whether the Secretary of War will carry out the project adopted by Congress against the recommendation of the Secretary of

Mr. KEIFER. There is absolutely nothing of the kind in the proposed amendment.

Mr. MANN. Well, I wonder if the gentleman has read his amendment?

Mr. KEIFER. I have read it through, and I drew it, and I know the meaning of the language. There is nothing of the kind in it.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio.

The question was taken; and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. MORRELL. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add as an additional section the following:
"Sec. 7. That it is the sense and desire of this Congress that hereafter the appropriation bill for the rivers and harbors shall be given the same consideration and shall be on the same scale as those for the Army, Navy, and other large appropriation bills, and constant large appropriations being necessary to enable the United States to keep pace with the other nations of the world, and being for the good of the country at large, that this appropriation shall hereafter be an annual one."

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order on that. I don't think it is quite fair to bring in that kind of a proposition here on this bill. Many of us favor that, but to bring it in here and tack it onto an appropriation bill I do not think is proper.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Chairman, this has already been debated by the gentleman from Pennsylvania and others, and there is other business that the House would like to get at this after-

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania has been recognized.

Mr. MORRELL. Mr. Chairman, I insist on my right to be heard.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Chairman, then I make the point of order. The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania has been recognized to offer an amendment. Who makes the point of order on the amendment?

Mr. PAYNE. I make the point of order. Mr. BURTON of Ohio. I reserve the point of order, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman state his grounds for the point of order?

Mr. MORRELL. The gentleman from Ohio has reserved his point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understood the gentleman from New York to insist upon the point of order.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Chairman, it is not germane to the bill.
The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will examine the amendment.
Mr. PAYNE. Of course it is utterly incompetent to provide by law what another Congress shall do.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks that the amendment is germane. The Chair overrules the point of order.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I would like to be This amendment has no place here.

Mr. MORRELL. Mr. Chairman, I think the distinguished gentleman reserved his point of order.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, it is a glaring piece of buncombe; that is all it is.

Mr. MORRELL. Mr. Chairman, I thought I had the floor? The CHAIRMAN. If the gentleman from Ohio has made the point of order and desires to discuss it, the Chair will recognize him. Otherwise the Chair will recognize the gentleman who offered the amendment.

Mr. MORRELL. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.
The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.
Mr. MORRELL. Mr. Chairman, as I understand it, the point of order was raised by the gentleman from New York [Mr. The Chair looked at the amendment and decided that it was germane, and then recognized myself-"the gentleman from Pennsylvania." How can a point of order be made twice as to the same thing? It has once been overruled.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio reserved the point of order to permit discussion of the merits of the proposition, as the Chair understood. If that point is reserved, the Chair will recognize the gentleman to discuss the merits of the proposition. If the point is made and not reserved, the Chair will rule.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. Do I understand the Chair then-The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear any gentleman who wishes to discuss the point of order.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, this is a bill made up of specific items for the appropriation of money for rivers and harbors, and giving directions as to the manner and method in which that money shall be expended. Now, here is a declaration of policy which might come very properly in a declaratory resolution. If it has any force at all it is a direction as to what the next Congress shall do, a direction which is empty and which this Congress has no right to make. I sincerely trust this question in the first place will not be presented to the committee, and that if it is presented it will be voted down, because it has no place here.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule on this propo-This is a proposition which is germane to the river and The only question is a question of germaneness or a question of jurisdiction. On the river and harbor bill there is a perfect right to legislate on any question germane to the bill, and the Chair overrules the point of order, and recognizes the gentleman from Pennsylvania to discuss his amendment.

Mr. MORRELL. Mr. Chairman, I have already taken up the time of the House for a few minutes on the general purposes of this resolution, and I shall not occupy more than two or three minutes at the present time.

I appreciate the fact that legislation is delayed; that it is the desire of every Member of Congress that such speed as possible should now be had for the rest of the session. man, I was delighted in the course of debate yesterday to hear the distinguished chairman of the Rivers and Harbors Committee, in answer to why this, that, or the other locality should not receive more money, reply practically in these words, "How is it possible to distribute the small sum of from twenty-five to thirty million dollars per year for rivers and harbors over this great country, and give everybody what they wanted?" agree with that proposition, and that is one of the reasons why I want forcibly to bring the terms of this new section before the House. He also referred to the fact that Pennsylvania and Philadelphia had generously contributed the amount of $5,000,000 toward the improvement of the Delaware River. Chairman, I do not believe in that policy. I do not think that any State or any particular locality should be taxed doubly for that thing which essentially belongs to the Federal Government. The Government maintains the post-offices, the Government maintains the Army and Navy, and why, after having assumed the charge of our rivers and harbors, any locality should be taxed a second time is an anomaly to me. Mr. Chairman, I trust that this section will be given the attention and the vote that it deserves. How can we, if we vote down this section, come to another Congress and ask for more than the paltry sums that we are given to-day? And I call them paltry for the reason that they are when it is realized that this is a biennial appropriation, and when they are taken in comparison with the appropriations that are annually made for the Army and Navy, and other great appropriations, and also when we stop for a moment to think that in this present fiscal year we are going to spend $25,000,000, the same amount of money almost that is carried in this bill for one year for the Panama That is all I have to say.

Mr. BURGESS. Mr. Chairman, I want to suggest to my friend from Pennsylvania that I think it will be much better if he withdraws this amendment, and in making that request I wish to assure him that no man in this House is more heartily in favor of annual river and harbor appropriation bills than myself, but I believe that many Members of this House will take the view that it is improper, in a bill of this character, to make a declaration of this sort, and hence will vote against this amendment. Now, if this amendment fails, it will go out through the press to the country that this Congress refuses to declare in favor of annual river and harbor appropriation bills, and the cause which the gentleman from Pennsylvania and myself have so much at heart will be largely injured rather than aided by pressing this question in this shape now. Undoubtedly these bills ought to be passed annually; undoubtedly greater amounts ought to be carried in the bill, but that is a great question, a great administrative question, to be determined by the dominant party in power, and no one Congress can declare for another Congress what the rule shall be; and that being the fact, the danger is that this amendment will be voted down and the country will get the impression that Congress itself has declared against annual river and harbor appropriation bills, and for that reason I earnestly ask the gentleman not to press this amendment at this time in this bill. [Applause.]

Mr. MORRELL. Mr. Chairman, as this resolution is still in the Rivers and Harbors Committee, if the gentleman will suggest some method other than by attaching it in the form of an extra section to this bill, by which it can be brought before this House, and every Member of this House, whether a member of the River and Harbor Committee or not, be given an opportunity to vote or express their opinion of the merit or demerit of this section, I will be glad to withdraw it.

Mr. BURGESS. I would suggest to the gentleman the question could be met by the introduction of a separate resolution. t only involves the mere declaration of what the present Members of this House think ought to be done; that is all.

Mr. MORRELL. This additional section is exactly the language of a resolution already introduced by me, and the resolution remains in the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

Mr. BURGESS. Very well, then—

Mr. MORRELL. Will the gentleman report that resolution from the Committee on Rivers and Harbors?

Mr. BURGESS. I can only speak for myself. I will vote for any such resolution most cheerfully as a declaration of my opinion as to what ought to be done, but the gentleman must realize that this involves a great question of administration to be determined by the dominant party, whatever it may be, that is in power, and it is useless for us to provoke a discussion at this time over this sort of a question.

Men will vote against this amendment because they think it ought not to be put into this bill who would really be disposed to unite with gentlemen and myself in bringing about what we seek to declare for by the resolution. It will be much better for the great cause that we have at heart not to press this now, I feel certain.

Mr. MORRELL. I would like to ask the distinguished chairman of the committee

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I must decline to answer further questions on this.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amend-

The question was taken; and the amendment was rejected. Mr. BEDE. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent for five or ten minutes.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. Bede] have ten minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection. Mr. BEDE. Mr. Chairman, I had thought of saying a few words a little earlier in the reading of this bill, but yesterday and the day before were largely devoted to eulogies, as has already been suggested, and I thought it unwise for one of my temperament to obtrude himself and disturb the devotions of this body. If I could offer a eulogy, I would not only offer it to the chairman, who I hear has some thought of retiring from the committee, and to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BANK-HEAD], who not only retires from the committee, but from Congress, and has already received some mention, but also to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. BISHOP], and the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. Dovener], who retires also from the committee and from Congress on the 4th of March. But I have recently discontinued eulogies because I was so outdone and so completely flabbergasted by the remarks of a little tot in my own State. She had just started to school at the age of 6 years, and after spending a few days in that new enterprise and new world to her, her mother asked her how she liked the teacher.

In true feminine fashion she praised her teacher to the superlative degree, and then capped the climax of her eulogy by exclaiming, "Why, mamma, she's good enough to marry God."

I can not hope to compete with this and shall hereafter leave eulogies to the kindergarten. But I may be permitted in passing to suggest that the chairman of the Rivers and Harbors Committee is a bachelor, and that from year to year he sleeps with the river and harbor bills. [Laughter.] And I have not the slightest doubt that the angels come to him in his dreams and tell him what to do with the Delaware River and the Ohio River and Chicago's alimentary canal. [Great laughter.] But if he had been married as much as I have [laughter.], he would know a little bit more, perhaps, about diplomacy; he would understand that you can not bring a stick of candy home to one tot and not bring something to the other without making discord in the home and perchance driving the cricket from the hearth.

And so sometimes we have to do things that we can scarcely afford in order to keep all parts of the country upon an equality. Because of these conditions and the pressure from all parts of the country, I realize that we need a great, strong man at the head of this committee, and if the gentleman from Ohio does resign, I hope he will resign in my favor, so that the chairman will at least not be far from the Great Lakes, whose waters bear the chief commerce of our country. [Laughter and appliance]

Sometimes when I think of the propositions that are brought to the Rivers and Harbors Committee I am reminded of a little incident, which I think the leaders of the House will permit me to tell, because it illustrates a point and stands so pat. It is about a class of boys in school who were receiving instruction on the several senses and functions of the body. The teacher said to them: "Now, my dear little boys, remember that your eyes are made to see with, your ears are made to hear with, your nose is made to smell with, and your feet are made to run with," when one of the boys exclaimed, "Hold on, teacher; I ain't made right. My nose runs and my feet smell." [Great laughter.]

So, Mr. Chairman, some things that are offered to our committee must be eliminated and some must be fumigated [laughter], for some parts of the country were not made right, and we have been doing the best that we could.

Something has been said about the chairman dominating the Rivers and Harbors Committee. He dominates that in no other sense than he dominates the Committee of the Whole in the consideration of this bill. He sometimes dominates me, as the census statistics dominate me, because of the breadth of the ground they cover and their demonstrable accuracy. But when it comes to establishing great national policies I yield my opinion to no man on the River and Harbor Committee or off it, and the chairman of that committee does not ask us to yield in matters of that kind. But, as I have already suggested, he has given great thought to river and harbor improvements for many years and knows many things not familiar to the general body of this House, and very naturally and very properly has a large following on both sides of this Chamber.

There is one thing about the river and harbor bill I would like particularly to mention. It holds the Union together. [Laughter.] We have been doing many things during the last generation to bring the North and South in closer touch. We have been building a few railroads to the Gulf; that has helped some. We have been raising the Stars and Stripes on many Federal buildings and public schools; that has helped more. We have been making fortunes in all of the States of the Union, which permit us to come and go and know each other better than we did. That has pushed the good work along. But let me add that the waters of the Missouri from the Rocky Mountains join the waters of the Ohio from the Alleghenies. The waters of the Mississippi, coming from the frozen North, join with the waters of the Tennessee and Cumberland from the sunny South and flow on in majestic manner to the sea. That helps most. For these great waterways, with their commerce and community of interest, will do more to bind the North and South together than all the bands of iron or hooks of steel, or flags or fortunes. The State lines are indeed still dimly seen, but Mason and Dixon's line has been obliterated forever.

I have long advocated $50,000,000 a year or $100,000,000 in our biennial bill for internal improvements. And now I behold my dreams come true. We have put more than $83,000,000 into the measure now before us, and I have an abiding faith that the Senate will do the rest. [Laughter and applause.]

the measure now before us, and I have an abiding faith that the Senate will do the rest. [Laughter and applause.]

I have been surprised at a few things that happened in this House. Most of all was I surprised when the gentleman from The Hague—I mean from Missouri [laughter and applause]— took the position that he did. He has given us more trouble for a man of peace than any man of that sort I have ever known. [Laughter.] Indeed, I am inclined after all to think, despite his professions, that he is a man of war and stands very close to me in believing in a big Navy and the simple life. [Laughter.] This bill could have been made better, but it could have been made so only by making it bigger. I was inclined myself to include a few items that do not appear in this measure, but I was overwhelmed by the majority of the committee. However, it contains nothing which I would strike out.

Let me say for my own section of the country that the commerce of Lake Superior is not 40,000,000 tons, as expressed here yesterday by one speaker, but during the last year 52,000,000 tons passed up and down through the Soo Canal. It can be demonstrated that this freight was carried $1.75 a ton cheaper for the shipper, the consumer, the producer—for all the people—than it could have been carried by rail, thus making a total saving of more than ninety millions a year, to say nothing of the cheaper railroad rate, as a result of water competition, on freight never shipped by water at all. Therefore it can be shown that the saving on the traffic of Lake Superior alone in a single year is more than all the Government has spent on all the lakes in all the history of our country. If like conditions can be shown elsewhere in the Union, I think the River and Harbor Committee will be as willing to make appropriations for such other undertakings as for the channels and harbors from Buffalo to Duluth.

It has been stated that $19,000,000 have been appropriated for the Great Lakes. Thirteen million dollars of that is in two items; for an alternate channel in the Detroit River to prevent this Great Lake traffic being choked up if an accident should occur at that point, and an additional lock at the Soo to prevent the choking of the traffic at that place if the one lock failed us.

These two items of $13,000,000 may be charged to me instead of the chairman of the committee, for they are of as much importance to my district as if made in the harbor of Duluth itself.

Then I might go a little farther away from home. I have tried to do the best I could for New England and New Jersey. You know that the work of creation was finished in seven days, when it surely ought to have had eleven. It was not very well done. There are a lot of places, like the boy already mentioned, that were not made right. Therefore the River and Harbor Committee or the local community must step in and do almost endless work. About the only item that has been seriously criticised here was the appropriation for Cape May, N. J. I wish to say that after looking that up a little more thoroughly I feel that if there was but one vote for that particular feature in this bill that vote would be my own. I took occasion to look up the distances at the Coast Survey, and find it is 140 miles from Cape May to Sandy Hook and 185 miles from Cape May to Norfolk, Va., while between those two points, for a distance of 225 miles, there is not a deep-water harbor on the Atlantic coast.

I sailed up that coast a year ago on the little ship Cherokee from Santo Domingo. On the second trip afterwards it was wrecked off the shoals of Atlantic City while struggling desperately to reach New York. There was no opportunity for it to save itself or its crew except by drifting onto the bar. I do not know that the improvement at Cape May will prove practical, but I believe the experiment is worth trying. Local capitalists have spent more than $3,000,000 to make a deep and safe harbor of 700 acres in area, and the appropriation in this bill is merely to improve the entrance. I am firmly for it.

Some folks, of course, have not got all that they want in this bill. They may feel a little bit unlucky. But they should brace up like the little boy who, when laughed at and jibed because he was born while his father was in the Army, responded: "I think it was lucky enough that mother was at home." [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Minnesota has expired.

Several Members. Take ten minutes more.

Mr. BEDE. I think five minutes will be plenty.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to extending the time of the gentleman five minutes?

There was no objection.

Mr. BEDE. And now let me refer to one of the practical features of river and harbor improvement. We have taken away railroad rebates. What does that mean? In the past the rich man has received the rebates and the poor man has paid the freight. Now, without the rebates the rich men are turning toward water transportation, and they are going to have it as they never did before. We are going to improve the Ohio and the upper Mississippi, and to some extent the Missouri, bad as it is. I realize that if a man owned the Missouri he would have to go out every morning and find his river. [Laughter.]

No one can tell where it is going to be from one day to an It is a most difficult stream to control. With its floods and its disasters it sometimes is called the Mother of Dragons. The Mississippi is the Father of Waters, and when the Father of Waters and the Mother of Dragons get together at St. Louis it is no wonder that my friend from that good city has a little trouble. [Laughter.]

But even if the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. Burton], chairman of the River and Harbor Committee, should retire, I want the people along the Delaware and along the Ohio to know that still have one friend in that body. The gentleman from Ohio has done, I think, about all that could have been done with the many conflicting interests that have come before us, and has tried to do the best, not for his State, not for my State, not for the State of any member of the committee, but for the whole United States, and the reception given to our measure in this House is a compliment to us all.

I did not rise to make a speech and shall detain the House but a moment more. I could not help thinking, when one of the gentlemen was talking about Green River yesterday, of the little instance which occurred when the River and Harbor Committee was traversing the Ohio. At every point that we stopped in Kentucky some members of the local community presented each member of our committee with a quart bottle of the real thing. We were traveling with light baggage, and before we got through we had more than we could carry. [Laughter.] More than we could carry in our valises. I understand that some of the memsent their clothes home by express and kept the liquor with them. [Laughter.] And I wondered if it was on the Green River that the Three Feathers brand of liquor is manufactured, and if they needed deep-water navigation for that product. [Laughter.] I do not suppose it means they really have three feathers, but that by using the liquor one could see three. [Laughter.]

There is one very sad feature about this discussion. it is the first time in the history of our country when the Missourians have asked for water. [Laughter.] It is certainly the first time that I have ever refused them. I regret we could not grant their every wish.

In the deep waterway from Chicago to St. Louis we have many problems to solve. In the first place, it is an international question that affects Canada, by the waters flowing out of Lake Michigan into the Illinois and Mississippi. In the second place, it is opposed by the great Lake interests, who fear it will lower the level of the Lakes and in some measure depreciate the value of the harbors and channels upon which so much money has been expended by our Government. In the next place, the lower Mississippi is not so deep as the proposed canal, and the question is whether it is a business proposition to dig a canal deeper than the ocean. [Laughter.]

Now, if we can have 14 feet all the way from Chicago to the Gulf, without affecting the harbors of the Great Lakes or getting into a tangle with Canada, I will be the first member of the River and Harbor Committee to vote for the project. It is asserted that the canal for ship purposes would not require so much water as the canal for drainage purposes, and if that be true, then no great evil would come from it, and let us hope many blessings.

But the people of the Lakes are afraid of any cross section big enough to draw off Lake Michigan, and we must first quiet their fears and have the approval of the War Department before we enter upon so great a project. But I have taken up too much of your time already. Let me only add that I would not have talked at all except, as they say under the civil law, to homologate the record of my committee [laughter], and having homologated it and shown that not only the chairman, but every member of the River and Harbor Committee, is striving to do right, as his conscience gives him to see the right, I trust the bill may pass without dissent. We of the committee are the friends of every section of the country, and I hope in other bills, at future times, to satisfy all interests from every section of the nation, and then to them —

The night shall be filled with music, And the cares that infest the day Shall fold their tents like the Arabs, And as sliently steal away.

[Applause.] Mr. BURTON of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee now rise and report the bill with the amendments to the House, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

chair, Mr. CURRIER, chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 24991, the river and harbor bill, and had directed him to report it back to the House with sundry amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to, and that the bill as amended do

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is a separate vote asked for on any amendment?

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I think a separate vote should be had on the amendment on page 73, relating to the appropriation for the town of Wittenberg, Mo. When the item was reached I asked if there was objection by anyone. was no objection, but the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. Rhodes] was out of the House at the moment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is a separate vote asked for on any other amendment? If not, the other amendments will be agreed to.

The question was taken; and the other amendments were agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore: The Clerk will report the amendment upon which a separate vote is demanded.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 73, after line 5, insert "and the amount of $10,000, hereto-fore appropriated for Wittenberg Harbor, shall be made available for the general improvement of the river."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. If there is no objection of a valid nature I should like to have it remain in the bill.

Mr. RHODES. Mr. Speaker, at the time this matter came up I was not on the floor. If I had been here I should have objected. I am here now, hence I object to the amendment and hope it will not be adopted. The object in changing this appropriation is that this item of $10,000 may be used for general improvement purposes. At this point on the river we have a condition which I believe makes it necessary to do more bank improvement and less dredging. I should be opposed to any change with respect to this item which sought to transfer it to the general fund, the major part of which would then be expended for dredging purposes.

I know, as a matter of geography, at this place we have the alluvial banks, and the volume of water carried by the river is hard to confine in its channel, and the method of bank improvement has been more successful than dredging.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. I trust the gentleman will confine his remarks to this specific project. We have been on the subject of dredging a considerable time, and I want to say to the gentleman that so far I am now inclined to be with him, but if we change from the policy of dredging and it is to be used for some other purpose I might be against it.

Mr. RHODES. I desire to ask the chairman of the committee for what purpose it is intended this $10,000 shall be expended, if converted into the general fund?

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. For the general improvement of the river; first, for dredging and then for the maintenance of existing works and for emergency work beside. As it is now, of course it belongs to Wittenberg Harbor.

Mr. RHODES. Mr. Speaker, in the interest of the district I have the honor to represent, I ask the House not to divert this item from the purposes for which it has been appropriated. hope the amount will remain as it is.

Mr. BURTON of Ohlo. Mr. Speaker, this item came here on recommendation of the engineer, on this ground, that it was appropriated some years ago and never had been used.

I feel, however, unwilling, without having given further hearing to the parties interested, and especially to the Member from that district, to insist upon the amendment. I therefore ask that it may be rejected.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken; and the amendment was rejected. Mr. BURTON of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I now move the previous question on the bill and amendments to its final passage.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The question was taken; and the bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, read the third time, and passed. On motion of Mr. Burron of Ohio, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

REUBEN A. GEORGE.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly the committee rose, and Mr. Dalzell, Speaker pro tempore, having resumed the from the President of the United States; which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Invalid Pen-

To the House of Representatives:

In compliance with the resolution of the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring) of the 6th instant, I return herewith House bill No. 20928, entitled "An act granting an increase of pension to Reuben A. George."

THEODORE ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, February 7, 1907.

RESIGNATION OF A MEMBER.

The SPEAKER pro tempore also laid before the House the following communication:

WASHINGTON, D. C., February 7, 1907.

Hon. Joseph G. Cannon, Speaker of the House of Representatives.

DEAR SIR: Having this day forwarded to the governor of our State my resignation as a Representative in the Fifty-ninth Congress from the Fifth Congressional district of Michigan, and having given notice of my intention not to qualify as a Representative of the Sixtieth Congress, I desire to tender my resignation as a Member of the House of Representatives, effective Saturday, February 9, 1907.

Deeply sensible of a warm personal obligation to my associates in the House of Representatives for their uniform courtesy and helpfulness in the performance of my public duty, and acknowledging with gratitude my appreciation of your kindness and good will, I am, with great respect, Yours, very truly, WILLIAM ALDEN SMITH. The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, the communication will lie on the table.

There was no objection.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

Mr. Smith of Kentucky, by unanimous consent, was granted leave to withdraw from the files of the House, without leaving copies, the papers in the case of Steven Camplin, H. R. 1572, Fifty-seventh Congress, no adverse report having been made

Mr. Dale, by unanimous consent, was granted leave to withdraw from the files of the House, without leaving copies, the papers in the case of Henry Grete, H. R. 1942, Fifty-sixth Congress, no adverse report having been made thereon.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. Overstreet of Indiana, by unanimous consent, was granted leave of absence for one week on account of serious illness in his family.

Mr. Henry of Texas, by unanimous consent, was granted indefinite leave of absence on account of public business.

PHILIPPINE BANKING BILL

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that certain members of the minority of the Committee on Insular Affairs have leave for three legislative days to file a minority report or reports on the bill H. R. 25186, the Philippine banking bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Wisconsin asks unanimous consent that certain members of the minority of the Committee on Insular Affairs may have leave to file minority views upon the Philippine banking bill within three legislative days. Is there objection?

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman from Wisconsin a question as to whether the report has been filed.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Yes.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I have here the dissenting views of five of the minority, which I will present at this time, if I may. The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman may file that under the order just made.

DENATURED ALCOHOL.

Mr. HILL of Connecticut. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill (H. R. 24816) to amend an act entitled "An act for the withdrawal from bond tax free of domestic alcohol when rendered unfit for beverage or liquid medicinal uses by mixture with suitable denaturing materials," approved June 7, 1906, and in view of the lateness of the hour, I ask unanimous consent that the same may be considered in the House as in the Committee of the Whole House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Connecticut asks unanimous consent to consider the bill referred to in the House as in the Committee of the Whole House. Is there

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I think this is out of the usual course, and I object.

Mr. HILL of Connecticut. Then, Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the present consideration of the bill H. R. 24816, and pending that I ask unanimous consent that the time limit may be fixed to debate of thirty minutes, one half of which shall be controlled by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Graff] and the other half by myself.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Connecticut asks unanimous consent that general debate be closed in thirty minutes, one half of the time to be controlled by him-self and the other half by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. GRAFF].

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Speaker, I object to the limit of time. It is entirely too short for any reasonable debate on this

Mr. HILL of Connecticut. All right. Mr. Speaker, I make the motion to go into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

The motion was agreed to; and accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 24816, the denatured alcohol bill, Mr. BOUTELL in the chair.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 24816) to amend an act entitled "An act for the withdrawal from bond tax free of domestic alcohol when rendered unfit for beverage or liquid medicinal uses by mixture with suitable denaturing materials," approved June 7, 1906.

Mr. HILL of Connecticut. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the first reading of the bill may be dispensed with.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Connecticut asks unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill may be dis-Is there objection? [After a pause.] pensed with. hears none.

Mr. HILL of Connecticut. Mr. Chairman, a year ago we passed what is now known as the "denatured alcohol law." As it went from the House of Representatives it gave to the Secretary of the Treasury and the Commissioner of Internal Revenue the largest discretion as to the establishment of denaturing warehouses, the mode and manner of denaturing, the character and quantity of the denaturant. It was subsequently amended, and that action renders necessary certain further amendments now. The propositions embodied in these amendments are as follows: Section 1 provides that certain articles in which alcohol is used for their manufacture shall be admitted to the privileges of the bill. This is based upon the fact that in the manufacture of these articles the alcohol is destroyed in the process so that it is imposible to recover it.

Section 2 provides that the Commissioner of Internal Revenue shall have full discretion in authorizing the establishment of denaturing warehouses, which was inadvertently taken away by the amendments of last year. This is in accordance with the custom in England, France, and Germany, where denaturing establishments are located in large manufacturing centers, and is entirely in the interest of a cheap commodity and the convenience of the consumer, both for fuel, light, and power and for manufacturing purposes. The third section provides for methods of transportation in steel containers or in tank cars, which in the first place is a safer form of transportation than in wooden barrels and in wooden box cars, and in the second place is far more economical. It will probably save to the consumer at least 4 or 5 cents a gallon on the cost of transporta-tion, taking the country as a whole. The entire section as it will appear in the bill is a substitute for the original section. was drawn by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue himself, and indeed, the whole bill is practically the product of the Treas nry Department, it having been redrawn from all the bills which have been introduced in the House this year, four in number, one by the gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. Marshall], one by the gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. Gronna], one by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. VOLSTEAD], and one by myself, all of them having been submitted to the Treasury Department, and the bill as you now have it with its amendments having received the approval of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue and the Secretary of the Treasury. So far as tank cars are concerned, their use is a common practice in Germany.

The reason for the economy is this: In the first place, it saves the cost of the barrels. In the second place, in shipping alcohol or liquor in wooden barrels the freight is charged not only on the alcohol but on the barrel also, and in returning the empty casks the freight is charged at a still higher rate, whereas in shipping by tank cars only the weight of the alcohol itself is The tank car is returned free of charge, and the charged for. shippers receive, as a general rule, 2 cents a mile each way from the railroad company for the privilege of using the car, and including these several economies, together with the saving by piping and pumping at the distillery, the cost to the consumer will be reduced about 51 cents per gallon.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. Hill] yield to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CrumMr. HILL of Connecticut. Certainly.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I am in thorough sympathy with the purpose of the bill, but in a conversation I had a day or two ago with a distiller out in Indiana he made the criticism of the bill that it opens wide the door for fraud, and that the regular distillers would be at a great disadvantage in competing with these small distilleries that the bill provided for. I would like to know the gentleman's opinion in regard to the adequacy of safeguards to prevent frauds against the internal-revenue law.

Mr. HILL of Connecticut. That refers to the next section-the small distilleries, I suppose? Mr. CRUMPACKER, Yes.

Mr. HILL of Connecticut. I come to that now. The gentleman has no idea but that a steel container and steel tank cars would be safer than the present method of transportation in wooden barrels and box cars, which are easily subject to the attack of any boy in possession of a 5-cent gimlet.

Mr. Chairman, the fourth section proposes to introduce into this country the German farm distillery methods. Ninety per cent of all the alcohol which was denatured in Germany last year was the product of the farm, not of industrial distilleries. It is a fair, open field for competition. I asked one of the gentlemen, possibly the one to whom my friend from Indiana refers, whether, in the shipments which have thus far been made since the 8th of January, when the first gallon of denatured alcohol was put upon the market in this country, if he had sold a gallon which displaced a gallon of taxed-paid alcohol or whether all of those sales did not either displace wood alcohol or were for entirely new uses in new processes of manufacture begun under the provisions of this new law.

He told me that he had not displaced tax-paid alcohol, but that the business was entirely a new one to him. I therefore submit that in such a business, absolutely new to the existing distilleries of grain alcohol in this country, that it is only fair to throw this open to the competition of the farmers of this It is because the bill was so amended last year that the small producer could not profitably engage in the business that this new system is proposed. Any farmer can to-day, under the beverage spirit law, make alcohol without restriction as to quantity, but the necessity for the construction of a bonded warehouse and for a separate denaturing warehouse makes it difficult for him to profitably utilize his waste products, and the farmers of the country are therefore feeling disappointed in the legislation of a year ago.

This bill brings into the United States the German farm-distillery system, where a farmer at the end of his crop season can sort his crop, take his culls, whatever they be, of corn or potatoes, and by a reasonable notice to the Government can have his still inspected and locked, and subject to being inspected oc-casionally at the will of the Government, and, without the denaturing warehouse or bonded warehouse, can go ahead and utilize the waste products of his farm. What it means to Germany, gentlemen, is that last year 91,000,000 bushels of potatoes, culls—most of them unsuitable for market, unavailable for food purposes—were consumed in that way, and 76,000,000 gallons of alcohol were made principally from such culls. The farmers of the United States from Maine to California, in our northern potato-growing section, in the South, in the corn belt, in the sugar-beet section, and in the cane-sugar section, have a right to have such a system that they can utilize the waste products of their farm, and there is no danger, I want to say to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CRUMPACKER], not the slightest danger, because this has been tried for twenty-five years in Germany, and last year alone 5,775 of such stills were run upon the farms of that country. This law does not permit, as Germany does, the making of beverage alcohol or beverage spirits. Those stills can only be utilized for alcohol that is to be denatured. It is bonded from the still, straight through to the denaturing process, and I have not the slightest question but that it can be handled with entire safety to the revenue.

And I want to say right here that I have summered and wintered this year with Hon. John W. Yerkes, Commissioner of the Internal-Revenue System. I have followed these regulations from the beginning to the end during the recess of Congress, and I stand here to say that any criticisms which may have been made upon his action are wholly unjust and unfair, that he is heart and soul in favor of giving to every farmer and every manufacturer in this country every possible facility under the legislation which we passed last year, and no more honest, earnest, enthusiastic Government official lives in Washington today than that same man, who has spent his time and his health in trying to bring to a great success the legislation which you enacted a year ago.

Mr. MARTIN. Can the gentleman indicate approximately the probable cost of what he calls a farmer's distillation plant under the German system?

Mr. HILL of Connecticut. Yes, I can under the German system; but it would not be a fair criterion for us, for they build of stone and brick, and build for the future, while we build for ourselves, and for to-day only. It would probably cost $2,500 there. I am informed by the Commissioner that reports of the deputies in the different parts of the country state that the entire outfit could probably be put up here, using wooden buildings, at not exceeding $750.

Mr. MARTIN. Then that is approximately what they state the cost to the American farmer would be who might avail himself of this process.

Mr. MARSHALL. I want the gentleman to bear in mind that the gentleman from Connecticut includes the cost of buildings. Most farmers would have them, and there would only be the machinery to provide, and it would take about $150 for the whole entire outfit.

A Member. What would be the cost to the Government? Mr. HILL of Connecticut. Very little. The process of denaturing takes but a few minutes. It would depend upon the

The inspector is summoned from the collector's office, the spirit is drawn and either denatured or shipped as the case may be, and report is made accordingly.

Mr. GRAFF. What is the German bounty on alcohol?
Mr. HILL of Connecticut. There is no bounty in Germany on alcohol, except indirectly. There are four different forms of taxation in Germany, and the system is a complicated one. The final outcome is that an advantage of 21½ cents per gallon over and above the rebate of what is known as the "consumption tax" is divided between the producer, the dealer, and the consumer. Practically the consumers of beverage spirits pay this in an increased cost of that article.

The law passed by this country last year has excited the deepest interest in the countries of Europe. I have here the legisla-tion of England which followed immediately upon our action. England has taken off all the cost of supervision, which for twenty-five years had been borne by the consumer, and put it upon the treasury department. The quantity of denaturant for manufacturing purposes has been reduced from 10 per cent to 5; the restrictions upon dealers have been greatly modified; and, in addition, she is paying an absolute bounty on every gallon of from 5 to 10 cents, according to the degree of proof. Germany followed her example and took off the "contingent," or limit of product to each distillery at a reduced rate of taxation, and allowed the farmers to manufacture to any extent.

Mr. GILBERT. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a

Mr. HILL of Connecticut. Certainly.

Mr. GILBERT. I want to know if your bill pointed out any method of transportation in tanks?

Mr. HILL of Connecticut. It gives the tank-car system, for shipment in bond and under seal.

Mr. GILBERT. For the retail trade, what method is indicated in the bill?

Mr. HILL of Connecticut. It gives the retail trade just the same privilege as is given to every man, that he can go and buy at retail just as he buys water or oil.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. HILL of Connecticut. Certainly.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Did the gentleman from Connecticut visit Germany and make any investigation of this

Mr. HILL of Connecticut. I spent two months abroad last summer studying this question.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. From the gentleman's personal examination of the German system, is the gentleman convinced that substantially the plan adopted for the system there would prevent fraud here?

Mr. HILL of Connecticut. Oh, absolutely. I have no doubt about that. While the Commissioner of Internal Revenue is under the necessity of the utmost strictness in the protection of $140,000,000 of revenue, he is satisfied that the system can be safely adopted, and with no greater liability of fraud than now exists. I yield such time to the gentleman from Illinois as he desires.

Will the gentleman yield to a question? Mr. MANN.

Mr. HILL of Connecticut. Certainly.
Mr. MANN. Complaint was made to me some time ago about the materials that were required for the denaturing and the expensiveness of those materials. Has the gentleman and his committee given consideration to that subject?

Mr. HILL of Connecticut. We have, and I will put that all in the RECORD; if the gentleman will pardon me, it is getting

Mr. MANN. The gentleman calls up a very important bill here and it is not sufficient to say that it is late. The gentle-man will not get a vote any quicker by that.

Mr. HILL of Connecticut. I will answer the gentleman's

Mr. MANN. You answered the question I asked; will you permit me to ask you another question?

Mr. HILL of Connecticut. I will. Mr. MANN. What method do you provide to prevent fraud on the Government?

Mr. HILL of Connecticut. In the first place, the farm distilleries are locked, and the farmer can do nothing but feed the distillery; and when he wants to open it, he must send for the Government inspector to supervise the gauging and denaturing or shipment.

Mr. MANN. How often will that inspector go there?

Mr. HILL of Connecticut. It will depend on the size of the tank and the wish of the farmer to have it withdrawn and put on the market and the convenience of the Government official.

Mr. MANN. What will be the comparative expense of the in-spector as related to the value of the alcohol?

Mr. HILL of Connecticut. In all probability there will be no additional expense over that of the force now maintained, except a little traveling expenses, because the inspector would be summoned from the collector's office of the district, and it would take him but a few minutes to make the inspection.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman assumes that it would only take a few minutes for an inspector in Minneapolis to make an inspection of a farmer's distillery in the northwestern part of

Mr. HILL of Connecticut. I said there would be very little expense aside from the traveling expenses. One inspector could cover a very considerable territory. So far as the inspection is concerned, it will take a very few minutes.

Mr. MANN. Germany has 6,000 of these farm distilleries.

How many does the gentleman think he will have?

Mr. HILL of Connecticut. The gentleman's guess is just as good as mine. I hope we will have more than that in time. Germany has been in the denatured-alcohol business for twenty-

Mr. MANN. Does the gentleman think we have enough in-

Mr. MANN. Does the gentieman think we have enough inspectors now to inspect 6,000 farm distilleries?

Mr. HILL of Connecticut. I do not think we have got 6,000 farm distilleries, but I hope that we may have in time.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman assumes that we will have as many as Germany. I am in favor of the gentleman's bill, I am frank to tell him, as far as that is concerned, but I would like to know for my own information whether any consideration has been given to the question of expense as connected with the watching of these distilleries.

Mr. HILL of Connecticut. So far there have been but 11 inspectors appointed in the United States, and unless the number of distilleries should be very greatly increased, as I hope it will be, everything indicates that the present force in the offices of the various collectors can practically take care of this business without much additional expense.

Mr. MANN. Then there ought to be a prompt discharge of a number of officials of the present force who must be doing

Mr. HILL of Connecticut. That is not necessarily true.

Mr. Chairman, I said a few moments ago that I would put in the Record a statement in regard to the materials required for the denaturing and the expensiveness of those materials. Immediately after the regulations for carrying into effect the law of June 6, 1906, were published somewhat severe criticism began to be made as to the strictness of those regulations, and as Members well know, in various sections of the country it was claimed that the terms of the regulations were such that it was impossible for the farmer to get the supposed benefits of

I do not propose at this time to go into that matter, except to publish as a part of my remarks a letter written by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, the Hon. John W. Yerkes, in response to a request made by the President for an explanation of the mode of procedure of the Internal Revenue Department under the denatured alcohol act.

[From the Superior Telegram.]

ROOSEVELT CALLS ON YERKES FOR AN EXPLANATION OF CHARGES MADE IN SUPERIOR TELEGRAM REGARDING DENATURED ALCOHOL AND ALSO SENDS YERKES'S ANSWER TO THIS PAPER.

President Roosevelt through his secretary, Mr. Loeb, has called on Commissioner Yerkes of the internal revenue office for a statement of conditions on account of a recent editorial which apeared in The Telegram. The President, on reading The Telegram, thought the editorial on the free alcohol law was sufficient ground for an explanation of the law, and he thereupon instructed Secretary Loeb to communicate with Commissioner Yerkes asking for information in the case.

The editorial in question is quoted sufficiently in Mr. Yerkes's reply to give its sense and its repetition is unnecessary. President Roosevelt took the letter of Commissioner Yerkes and putting it in a package at once forwarded it to The Telegram. The explanation of Mr. Yerkes and the President's communication to The Telegram, through Mr. Loeb, are given herewith:

OFFICE OF COMMISSIONER OF INTERNAL REVENUE,
Washington, January 3, 1997.

My Dear Mr. Secretary: I have the honor to acknowledge receipt of your note of yesterday, inclosing a clipping from the Superior, Wis., Telegram of December 26, 1906, and the President's request that I give him material to enable him to answer the criticism contained in the editorial clipping named.

First, I call attention to certain statements of the editorial which are absolutely false:

"They (the Congressmen) thought they were bestowing a boon the beneficence of which would be felt on every farmstead. But some flaws were left in the bill which enabled the Internal Revenue Office, which actively opposed its passage, to rob it of all value as providing a cheap material for power, light, and fuel."

The statement that the Internal Revenue Office actively, or at all, opposed the passage of the denatured alcohol bill is absolutely without a suspicion of truth.

I was called before the Ways and Means Committee of the House, and the Finance Committee of the Senate, and my statements with regard to the proposed legislation were printed, and can be read of all men.

FAVORED IT FOR YEARS.

FAVORED IT FOR YEARS.

I have favored such a bill for four years, believing it would materially benefit the country, and would put this nation in an attitude for favorable competition with the manufactured products of foreign nations, where cheap alcohol was used by the manufacturers, through laws similar to the one adopted at the last session.

Representatives Payne, Boutell, Hill, Warson, and Tawney, and Senators Hale and Spooner are thoroughly familiar with my attitude regarding the measure and with the steps that have been taken by this office relative to the enforcement of the new law.

In the editorial appears the following statement:

"The chief tools used by the internal revenue officials in cheating the farmers out of the benefits expected from the law have been the requirements for the use of a large percentage of wood alcohol as a denaturizer, the requirement of a separate inspector for every distilling plant, and the limitation of the privilege of manufacture to distilleries having a capacity of not less than 500 gallons of alcohol per day. This last rule makes impossible its manufacture even by small groups offarmers cooperating together."

Neither the denatured alcohol law of June 7, 1906, nor the regularitions promulgated thereunder change in any respect the existing system with regard to the production of alcohol.

The new law takes the alcohol when produced under the system that has been in existence for forty years and allows it to be withdrawn from the bonded warehouse, where it must be placed, free of tax when the denaturing material has been added thereto, destroying its beverage qualities and its possibilities for use in liquid medicinal preparations.

NO LIMIT.

No LIMIT.

There is absolutely no limitation upon the size or capacity of a distillery producing alcohol for denaturing purposes or for commercial purposes.

No statement could be less in conformity with fact than the charge that the distillery must have a capacity of not less than 500 gallons a day. It can produce 5 gallons, 10 gallons, 500 gallons, or 5,000 gallons a day, just as the owners determine.

There are hundreds of distilleries in operation in the United States this month, and which have been operated for forty years past, whose daily output is not more than 12 or 15 gallons. Some produce less. With regard to the statement that a separate inspector must be provided for every distilling plant—that is not a regulation of this office nor a part of the new law, but a requirement of the old law of forty years standing.

No distillery can be operated except in the presence of a Government official, called a storekeeper-gauger or storekeeper.

NO FINANCIAL MOMENT.

NO FINANCIAL MOMENT.

But this is a matter of absolutely no financial moment to the distiller, for the cost of that official, whether he be stationed at a distillery producing alcohol for denaturing purposes, for commercial purposes, or producing whisky, is paid by the Government.

It will not cost the farm distiller 1 cent more to have a Government official at his place of business each day when he operates than to have him visit the plant once a week. The Government pays the official his salary.

him visit the plant once a week. The doverment pays the dischanges salary.

The honest distiller would want him constantly present; the dischonest distiller would prefer to have him absent as many days as possible.

Alcohol pays a tax of $2 per wine gallon, and it is absolutely necessary to put up every barrier possible against fraud now that under the law it can be withdrawn free of this tax for certain purposes.

If it were possible to find a denaturing agent that could not be removed from the alcohol by process of redistillation, by passing over charcoal beds, and by other chemical processes, then it would not be so necessary to guard every step of the new process.

MUST SUPERVISE.

MUST SUPERVISE.

There must be governmental supervision and surveillance to prevent the alcohol from being secretly and surreptitiously taken from the distillery where produced without the payment of tax, and to prevent, after it has been denatured, its reclamation through chemical process and its restoration to its original alcoholic condition.

The article complains of the regulations requiring the use of a large percentage of wood alcohol as a denaturizer, and adds:

"The use in the United States of wood alcohol, controlled by a trust, makes the cost of denaturing 7½ cents per gallon."

The exact cost of denaturing under one, and the first, material selected by the office is 4½ cents per gallon. Under the second formula adopted by this office it is 1½ cents per gallon.

The universal judgment of the scientific men of foreign countries who have for fifty years denatured alcohol, is that wood alcohol is the best denaturant known. It is very difficult to remove it from the alcohol by distillation processes, and it also allows the use of the product in many lines of trade that some other denaturant might prohibit. It is the best protection from fraud against the revenue by reason of its staying qualities. Furthermore, wood alcohol is an American product, and it is natural that we would use something produced here.

WHAT ENGLAND DOES.

and it is natural that we would use something produced here.

WHAT ENGLAND DOES.

Great Britain uses 10 per cent wood alcohol. The first formula selected by this office uses 9.05 per cent. With that, for the purpose of Imparting a disagreeable odor, is used a small fraction of benzine, also produced in the United States. The first formula follows absolutely the English system for completely denatured alcohol except a small lessening of the percentage of wood alcohol.

France uses wood alcohol and benzine; Germany wood alcohol and a pyridin base, commonly called "bone oil."

In connection with this pyridin base (produced in Germany and not in the United States as yet, and which has a very offensive odor) the German Government uses two parts of wood alcohol.

After a thorough study by the chief chemist of this office of the English system and the German system, and after as close a study as I could give, we agreed that the English system was the better, and adopted it, with a slight reduction in wood alcohol, above named.

THE REGULATIONS.

THE REGULATIONS.

The regulations declaring this formula were issued on September 29, 1906. At that time I had right to believe from statements made by the wood alcohol producers that they would put wood alcohol on the market, for denaturing purposes, at about 40 cents a gallon.

Early in December I received definite information from persons desiring to purchase wood alcohol as a denaturant that It was being priced to them at 70 cents per gallon, with an indefinite promise that after the 1st of January it might be placed upon the market at a lower price.

priced to them at 70 cents per ganon, when an indendice product that after the 1st of January it might be placed upon the market at a lower price.

To meet this condition, which I believed to be an unfair and unjust attempt on the part of the wood alcohol producer to place an extravagant price upon his product, on December 10, 1906, I prepared and issued a circular, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, allowing as an alternative denaturant the German formula.

PRICE DROPS.

The result of that order of December 10 has been to drop the price of wood alcohol from 70 cents to 45 cents per gallon; and it is believed a further reduction will come.

The first moment that this office knew that the wood alcohol interests were charging more than I had a right to believe they would charge, I met it with the order of December 10; and the result is as stated.

Before issuing this new order, I consulted fully with the Secretary of the Treasury, Mr. PAYNE, and Mr. Hill, and the action met with their thorough approval.

Mr. Hill and I thought we would take the matter up with the President, but did not because we thought it perhaps in the nature of an unkindness to burden him with additional weight.

The editorial closes with a restatement of the cost of inspectors, which, as I have said, does not affect the farm producer of alcohol, but the Government; repeats the effort to limit the privilege to large distillers, which is an absolute falsehood, and charges that this Bureau has defeated the good intentions of Congress toward American farmers.

QUOTES FARMER.

I take the liberty now of quoting from the annual address delivered by the grand master of the National Grange Patrons of Husbandry a few weeks ago. Discusing the subject of denatured alcohol, he said:

"A sensation-seeking magazine writèr, as a climax to a lurid series of articles in one of the popular magazines, has stated that the denatured alcohol law was passed in the interest of the Standard Oil Company, that the company was buying up all the distilleries, that the public has been grossly misled as to the possible use of alcohol, and that the large but limited manufacturing demand would be supplied by the Standard Oil Company in its own familiar way. To any one acquainted with the real facts such statements are too absurd to be worthy of even notice, but judging from the editorials and comments which have appeared in numerous publications throughout the country many good people have been made to feel that the farmer has been 'buncoed,' or, in the language of Colorado, 'handed a gold brick.'" has been 'buncoed,' or, in the language of Colorado, 'handed a gold brick.'"

We would caution patrons from giving too hasty credence to such statements. The law which goes into effect on January 1 is in all essentials what the Grange contended for from the beginning. There has been no change in the law governing distilleries, and the Grange was determined that there should be none.

There are over 1,000 distilleries of less than 30 gallons daily capacity in operation to-day, and which have been in operation for years. These distilleries make whisky and brandy, but there is nothing in the law which prevents their making commercial alcohol if they wanted to or could find a market for this product. All distilled spirit must be stored until it is released from Government control upon payment of tax. All these warehouses are bonded—that is, are absolutely under the control of the Government—and they are large or small to correspond with the distillery to which they are attached.

The denatured alcohol law simply provides that alcohol shall be removed free of tax from bonded warehouses after it has been denatured under Government supervision. The cost of this supervision is absolutely met by the Government. Any farmer, any group of farmers or citizens can go into the business of distilling and have a denatured bonded warehouse if desired. All they have to do is to apply to the Internal-Revenue Department for the necessary permit. If the regulations should prove in practice to be burdensome, or the denaturant should add especially to the cost of the alcohol, it will be a simple matter to secure the necessary changes to the regulations. The law will not have to be changed.

This is the view taken by the head of the official organization of farmers in the United States, and perhaps is fully as trustworthy in declaring.

This is the view taken by the head of the official organization of farmers in the United States, and perhaps is fully as trustworthy in declaring the view of the farmers as the editorial cited.

ONLY A FEW.

Alcohol to-day is produced at but few distilleries. There is virtually none produced in Kentucky, Maryland, and Pennsylvania, which are the great whisky-producing States. Illinois, New York, Michigan, and Louisiana produce practically the entire alcoholic output of the country, and it is distilled either from grain, principally corn, or from the refuse molasses following the production of beet sugar in Michigan and cane sugar in Louisiana.

Whether we will be able to follow the German system of producing alcohol from potatoes or not remains to be tried and tested. Up to this day not a gallon of alcohol has been produced by the distillation of potatoes here. I have always believed and said that eventually we might reach the German condition, although the question of wage paid to the agricultural laborer in this country as compared with that paid to the agricultural laborer in Germany must be considered. We pay 100 per cent more to farm laborers of the West than is paid to farm laborers in Germany. We do not produce in this country as yet the potato best adapted to distillation purposes. Our potatoes are produced for table use and starch.

WILL TRY POTATOES.

WILL TRY POTATOES.

I had yesterday a letter from a gentleman in California telling me at he intended to make a test of potato culture for distillation that he intended to make a test of potato culture for distillation purposes.

There is absolutely nothing in the existing law or in existing regulations that stands as a barrier in any way to the erection of distillerles by the farmer or by a number of farmers cooperating, and the production of alcohol by them from any farm product containing the necessary qualities. It is simply a question of business as to whether it will pay the farmer to do it, and he must make the test. There is nothing in the law or regulations to prevent him from doing it this year or next year. During the discussion of this bill before Congress there were many misstatements made in the public press as to the quantity of alcohol that would be denatured. Some enthusiasts put it at 200,000,000 gallons the first year.

CONSUMES MILLIONS.

CONSUMES MILLIONS.

The United Kingdom, which passed a denatured-alcohol law in 1855, consumes about seven million gallons a year of the denatured product. This is principally used in their manufactures.

France uses nine or ten million gallons a year, and Germany a little less than forty millions gallons.

Up to the present time none of these countries use it largely for the production of heat, light, or power. More is applied to that purpose in Germany than anywhere else. In Great Britain and France virtually no alcohol is used for the production of either heat, light, or power. A considerable quantity is used in Germany, especially for stationary engines and, to some extent, for lighting purposes.

These facts were well known when the bill was under consideration by those who had studied the question; but then, as now, the newspapers carried many erroneous statements in their columns.

I attach hereto an interview I gave to Mr. O'Laughlin on December 21, and which appeared in the Chicago Daily Tribune of January 1; also copies of letters written during the past month to Congressmen and others on this subject.

INTENSELY INTERESTED.

INTENSELY INTERESTED.

INTENSELY INTERESTED.

I trust the President will pardon the length of this communication. I have intense interest in the subject—have individually handled every branch of it since the law was passed by Congress.

The Secretary of the Treasury, under the law, has approved the regulations and steps taken by this office. The Members of Congress who have made the closest study of it largely approve. The trade journals who have familiarized themselves with foreign laws and our own regulations approve. The manufacturers have shown the fullest appreciation of the effort made to meet their demands and necessities.

A prominent Canadian official called on me a few weeks ago to discuss the new law and the regulations (which he had studied thoroughly), and he was good enough to say that we had started in this country in advance of other countries who had had similar laws for half a century.

FARMER SUITED.

FARMER SUITED.

The farmer in the United States is in as favorable an attitude to gain benefit under our law as is the farmer in Germany, the only country where the farm distillery, to any large extent, exists.

If the farmer should determine that it is to his financial benefit to engage in the production of alcohol now, and it becomes apparent that new legislation, or new regulations, are necessary to meet the new conditions as they arise, it is an absolute certainty that those laws and regulations will be made, and made promptly.

The Government, for its own protection, will limit to the lowest degree possible governmental surveillance of farm distilleries, for that expense will be borne by the Government.

It is impossible for a new law to be put into effect without criticism, especially when we deal largely with individuals and classes not here-tofore familiar with the governmental regulations and rules required for a protection of governmental revenues.

I return herewith the editorial sent me, and can only add that I would like the privilege of discussing the matter personally with the President, if he desires any further data.

I am, very respectfully,

JOHN W. YERKES,

Commissioner.

Hon. WILLIAM LOEB, Jr., Secretary to the President, the White House.

In view of the fact that forty-four years had passed since the people of the United States have had the privileges of using alcohol free of tax, and from the further fact that this country had never had experience in the use of denatured alcohol, immediately after the passage of the law last year I suggested to the President that the Commissioner of Internal Revenue should visit England, France, and Germany and study their regulations, which had been the outgrowth of from twenty-five to fifty years' experience, and believing that I could render my constituents no greater service than to take up a like study I accompanied the Commissioner upon the trip.

The day after my return I was called upon from a number of sources to publish the result of my observations, and in response to those requests I did publish in my home paper the following letter, which I desire to make a part of my remarks, in the belief that it may be of interest to those who contemplate engaging in the manufacture of denatured alcohol. This letter was dated and published August 23, 1906, as follows:

in the belief that it may be of interest to those who contemplate engaging in the manufacture of denatured alcohol. This letter was dated and published August 23, 1966, as follows:

In response to your request that I should give you a brief review of the practical working of the regulations for free denatured alcohol in Our party was received most cordially and treated with great courtesy by the officials of the three governments.

We found that they were not only familiar with the action which the anthorties in English Given in regard to the matter, but that the anthorties in English Given in regard to the street, but the anthorties in English Given in regard to the street, but the anthorties in English Given in the control of the water. The promises of a catual copies of our law which had passed but a short time before, and in Germany we found that the full hearings before the Senate and House committees had been transmitted to them what we are doing on this side of the water. A prominent official in Great Britain said to me: "I wonder how your country has got along for forty years without a denatured-alcohol law. It will work a revolution in your industries." We secured from the various governments in the British Parliament providing for new regulations for that country. Undoubtedly, spurred on by the keenness of German competition, Great Britain has found it necessary to make much more liberal providing for new regulations for that country. Undoubtedly, spurred on by the keenness of German competition, Great Britain has found it necessary to make much more liberal providing the cost. Besides that the cost of supervision, which has heretofore been thrown upon the consumer, will under the terms of the bill be hereafter paid wholly by the effect of the control of the board of commissioners of hinary and the supervision, which has heretofore been thrown upon the consumer, will under the terms of the bill be hereafter paid wholly by the effect of the control of the board of commissioners of hinary and the provid sistently accorded to the hat and other manufacturers of the United States.

The question of cooperative redistillation, of course, is somewhat more involved and will require a careful working out of a system, but I have not the slightest doubt but that the skill of the hatters themselves will be able to evolve such a plan, so that we may be put on an equality, so far as this material is concerned, with the other manufacturers of the world.

I am confident that the spirit can be produced and furnished to our manufacturers in the United States cheaper than in any other country, notwithstanding the large bounties which are being paid by the nations of Europe.

So far as I could see, the practically unrestricted use of denatured alcohol in England was based on the good character and standing of the manufacturer, supplemented by a bond for its proper use, and in addition to that, chemical control of the spirit by the Government. The processes of denaturing were examined into very carefully in all three countries. In each of them special exhibits were made by expert methylators at the request of the Government officials, and in each case we were accompanied to the establishments where the work was carried on by the representatives of the various governments.

Perhaps a statement of the method in one case will answer for all others. At one extensive establishment near London we found the process to be about as follows:

A separate building was used for the purpose of methylating spirit. It was a building of about 20 by 30 feet in size, four stories high, and strongly built. On the ground floor were four large fron tanks holding about 2,500 gm lons each. On the next floor we found twenty-one casks warehouse. On the third floor were the wood-alcohol tanks may be about a strongly built. On the ground floor were the wood-alcohol tanks were removed (these tank covers were flush with that floor) and the contents gauged and tested. The quantity to be put in the tanks on the first floor was run off through pipes connecting with the first-floor tanks and the upper tanks relocked. Then going to the second floor each cask of the grains with the grain spirit and the second floor each cask of the grains with the floor part of the covers, which were flush with the floor part of the covers, which were flush with the floor part of the covers, which were flush with the floor part of the covers, which were flush with the floor part of the covers, which were flush with the floor part of the covers, which were flush that as gauged and tested and the tank covers, which were flush with the floor part of the covers, which were flush the part of the part of the covers, which were flush with the floor part of the covers, which were flush with the floor part of the covers, which were flush with the floor part of the covers, which were flush the covers the part of the covers of the second floor each cask of the covers, which were flush the covers the covers of the covers of the covers, which were flush the covers of the cove ment chemist for verification, and the proprietor was then able to sell it at will.

We visited another varnish factory where they methylated spirits for their use only. The manufacturers assured us that the process was simple and that there were no vexations or annoying restrictions. The only returns made to the Government were where sales were made of the unfinished mixture of gum and spirit, but where the varnish was completed and packed ready for use and sold in that condition there was no requirement of reports as to the spirit so used.

In one of these factories we found that the proprietors were permitted to carry six months' supply of pure alcohol, of course in locked tanks, only to be opened in the presence of a Government inspector. We found that in France pure spirit was shipped freely by rail or by team to its destination, under seal, tax not paid.

The whole business, however, is far more systematically arranged in Germany than either in France or England. There the Government practically takes charge, from the production to the sale both at wholesale and retail, through a syndicate of spirit manufacturers. This syndicate controls more than 90 per cent of the entire production of Germany.

dicate controls more than 90 per cent of the entire production of Germany.

In Germany alcohol is made almost wholly from potatoes. The system is so complicated that it is difficult to state the precise cost per gallon. As near as I could get at it from the statistics the wholesale price of the denatured spirit for the fiscal year of 1904–5 was 25.32 cents per wine gallon of 190° strength. This was the average for the whole year. The highest yield of potatoes per acre was 360 bushels, and from that down to 124, probably a fair average would be around 200 to 225 bushels per acre. The potatoes are grown by the farmers and manufactured into alcohol in individual farm distilleries and in cooperative distilleries as well. The aggregate product of the farm distilleries in Germany. At the beginning of each year the syndicate managers fix a price which they will pay the producers for their product. This is based, of course, upon the condition of the potato crop. The price this year has been fixed at 25 per cent less than it was last, indicating a much better crop of potatoes. The product is taken and paid for by the syndicate as it is made by the various farmers. On all of this alcohol which is denatured or rendered undrinkable the Government allows a special return of tax previously paid, amounting to about 214 cents a gallon. Out of this amount the expenses of the syndicate, an allowance for their investment with a fair profit on their business, and commissions for the wholesale and retail dealers are all paid, and whatever is left at the end of the season is returned pro rata to the farmer or original producer. I was told that, as a general rule, quite an additional return was made at the end of the year to the producer, but that occasionally the payment was the other way, the price at which the product was sold not being sufficient to reimburse the managers of the syndicate for the amounts already advanced at the beginning of the the syndicate for the amounts already advanced at the beginning of the season.

The retail price at which denatured alcohol is being sold to-day in Germany is 29.68 cents per gallon at 190° strength, and 26.98 cents at 180° strength. This is for completely denatured spirit, put up in 1-liter flasks (we would call them quart bottles) and sealed and labeled, specifying quantity and quality. Any adulteration of the contents of such a package is a criminal offense in Germany. The bottle must be returned or an additional charge of 2½ cents is made. Very large quantities of it are being used. I ascertained the official wholesale prices of kerosene and gasoline duty paid and delivered in July at Berlin in competition with this article. Gasoline was 20.8 cents a gallon, best grade. Kerosene oil 15 cents a gallon. I did not learn the prices at retail.

The extent of the industry in Germany is shown by the fact that last year there were more than 91,000,000 bushels of potatoes consumed in the manufacture of alcohol, the product being 1 gallon of alcohol to 1.26 bushels of potatoes. Over 8,000,000 acres of the farms of Germany were planted to potatoes, and nearly 6,000 farm distilleries were in operation.

1.26 bushels of potatoes. Over $0,00,000 acres of the farms of Germany were planted to potatoes, and nearly 6,000 farm distilleries were in operation.

I have not the slightest doubt but that alcohol can be made much cheaper from corn in the United States, and that the same thing is true in the Northern States of the country, from potatoes, and probably in the Southern States from sweet potatoes. Certainly a traveler needs but a short stay in Germany or France to come to the conclusion that the cultivation of potatoes is an industry which can be greatly improved there when compared with the quality of our American product. I found that the practice was quite common of sorting the potatoes, the best being used for human food, the next grade for feeding to animals, and the refuse or poorest grade for manufacturing into alcohol. The first-grade potatoes were selling in Berlin at retail at the time we were there at 75 cents a bushel. The average cost of all potatoes grown in Germany in 1904-5 was 27.6 cents per bushel, and I am quite confident that this was far more than they were worth, the quality being taken into consideration. The German potato does not compare with the ordinary American article either in size or in general excellence for food purposes. They have, however, succeeded in developing a grade of potato in many parts of Germany which is especially adapted to the manufacture of spirits, but not adapted to human food. Of course in such cases the entire product goes direct from the farmers' field into the distillery.

These farm and cooperative distilleries are bonded and subject to inspection at the will of the Government officials. They do not, however, as a rule, have inspectors assigned to the work and present at all times. They can not begin distillation until a month's notice has been given of intention so to do, so that the Government is fully advised of what is going on and the officials are at liberty to examine their establishments and verify the production at any time. Great effort has been m any unnecessary restrictions.

We also visited a bottling establishment for methylated spirits. It was a very extensive and complete plant. The denatured spirit was received from the distilleries in tank cars. The tanks were in the basement of a very large and finely constructed building. The arrangements were so complete that an entire train load could be drawn off at once through a system of pipes into the tanks in the cellar, and from there it was pumped by electric pumps into the upper story. From these tanks it flowed to the bottling machines on the second floor. The bottles were washed by machinery and filled by machinery, and practically everything about the place was machine work.

This concern had 20,000,000 liter flasks on hand which they were filling.

Were filling.

Each bottle or flask was sealed with a paper seal on which the price fixed by the syndicate was printed, and it is very easy to see that the low price of denatured alcohol in Germany to-day is made at the expense of the consumer of the spirit which is used for beverage. In Germany the allowance of the rebate of about 21½ cents a gallon is made not only on such denatured spirit as is consumed for fuel, light, and power within the Empire and in such manufacturing processes as are carried on for home consumption, but the allowance is also made on the alcohol which enters into manufactured goods which are exported, and also upon the denatured spirit which is exported in its natural condition. So that while it would seem that their laws were of no interest to us, as an actual fact our manufacturers are entering into direct competition with them in all those industries where alcohol is a component part of the product of the establishment. This same condition will obtain in regard to Great Britain as soon as the present law which is now pending in Parliament goes into effect for the rebate or bounty there (and it is a bounty) will apply in the same way as it does in Germany. This is not true, however, in France. In France the rebate is only made upon that denatured alcohol which is consumed for fuel, light, and power, and does not include what is know as the ordinary methylation, or the spirit used for manufacturing purposes.

The actual cost of denaturing in Germany last year, including cost of denaturing material, labor, and all other expenses, was between 1 and 2 cents per gallon, the figures showing 1.8 cents.

Aside from the special denaturants for particular industries in Germany, the denaturant for general use consists of 2 per cent wood alcohol and one-half per cent of bone oil, which probably makes the net cost of the process less than in other countries where larger percentages are used.

The thoroughness with which the German people go into a subject is illustrated in the case of the syndicate of alcohol manufacturers. I visited an institution maintained by this combination. It is known as the Institution of the Association of the United Alcohol Manufacturers of Germany, and is operated and maintained for educational purposes at the expense of the trust. At a rough estimate I should say that the whole plant must have cost at least a million dollars. It consisted of a model brewery, a complete corn and potato distillery, a starch-manufacturing plant, extensive chemical laboratories, a vinegar-making establishment, a beet-sugar refinery, and extensive grounds for the cultivation of the articles entering into the various manufacturing processes. A large corps of the best agricultural and chemical experts of Germany were in charge of the institution, and last year 525 students were in attendance upon the lectures. I found there one young American from Michigan who was traveling in Germany at the time of the passage of the free alcohol law here. He immediately entered the institution and arranged for a special course of study preparatory to returning home and engaging in some branch of the business here as soon as the law goes into effect next January. Professor Delbruck is at the head of the institution. The whole purpose and object of it is to turn out experts in the various industries in which alcohol is used, and the minuteness with which records of their various experiments are kept and the thoroughness with which the studies are pursued is simply astounding to anyone who is accustomed to American haste and hustle.

I asked one of the professors as to the correctness of the statement prevalent in America that the use of alcohol in the Internal explosion engine resulted in the corrections of the metal. He seld et once that the are kept and the thoroughness with which the studies are pursued is simply astounding to anyone who is accustomed to American haste and hustle.

I asked one of the professors as to the correctness of the statement prevalent in America that the use of alcohol in the internal explosion engine resulted in the corrosion of the metal. He said at once that that was all nonsense, and immediately took me into a distillery where a large engine had been in continuous use with alcohol for the past six years. He admitted, however, that they had not fully overcome the difficulties with regard to the use of alcohol in the high-speed automobile, but expressed entire confidence that it would only be a short time before equal success would be secured with the automobile engine that had already been secured with the alcohol engine for other purposes. He was exceedingly emphatic as to the absolute inaccuracy of the statements that corrosion of the metal resulted from its use.

Of course the expenses of maintaining this institution, aside from the small tuition fees charged, comes out of the bounty which I have already referred to as being paid by the General Government.

We also visited a model institution maintained as a private school a short distance out of Berlin, at Oranienburg, where Dr. R. Kusserow has established a small model plant and engaged in the business, not only of installing farm distillery plants but of instructing farmers in their use. It is by these and similar methods that Germany has made such a wonderful success of the use of denatured alcohol, and yet with the confidence which I have in the skill and ability of the American people, and with the far cheaper cost of the production of corn and potatoes and other alcohol-producing materials in the United States, I am strongly of the opinion that we can not only meet the bounty-fed competition of the European countries, but can undersell them in this product as well. One thing is very certain, that the law which we now have will tend very largely to the utiliza

Since that time the price of denatured alcohol has been reduced in Germany to 18 cents a gallon for 180° proof, and on plain alcohol to 14 cents a gallon, without the container. This latter price was the wholesale price at Hamburg for August, September, and October, 1906.

As the result of these observations I am thoroughly convinced that the law of last year should be amended as proposed in the pending bill. The mistake of limiting the denaturing plants to the distillery premises, and of designating such plants only upon the application of a registered distiller, would prove very detri-mental to the growth and development of the industry in this It needs but a moment's consideration to understand that the centers of population, and the manufacturing centers especially, are the places where denaturing plants should be located, and we found quite a number of such plants in London, Paris, and Berlin, and in no case visited were they connected with a distillery. Take, for instance, the single industry of the manufacture of photographic paper. No one could justify for a moment a law which would require 73 pounds of denaturant, which is the amount required for each hundred gallons of alcohol used in this industry, to be transported a long distance to a distillery and freight paid on it by the manufacturer both ways to get back to his factory what to him is a raw material. The convenience of all consumers is best served by locating such denaturing establishment where the product is required, and the price of the product will be undoubtedly cheapened by permitting the widest competition throughout the country in the purchase of the plain spirit at the lowest possible price.

Furthermore, the limitation of the denaturing warehouse to the distilleries only practically takes away the market for his product from the farmer, who desires to sell his plain spirit, or who in a sparsely settled district can not there find an outlet for his surplus; indeed, the system of transportation by tank cars, and the independent denaturing warehouse are an absolute necessity for the development of the use of denatured alcohol to anything like the proportions which it should attain in this country.

Whether the Department would so rule or not, it is undoubtedly true that there is nothing in the law which requires a denaturing plant to be on the distillery premises; neither is there in the law anything which restricts the designation of but one denaturing plant to a distillery. Without amendment, therefore, it is equally undoubtedly true that if the competition of the farmer in the production of plain or denatured spirit can be prevented the tendency of the amendments made to the law last year would be to ultimately concentrate in the hands of a few large distillers a tremendous monopoly, for it is already apparent that the use of this article is to become very extensive in this country.

The law has now been in operation a single month and the returns which are coming in to the Internal-Revenue Bureau are extremely gratifying. The prompt response which has been made to its terms prove conclusively that the people of this country will speedily derive great benefit from it. Indeed, so far as the manufacturing interests are concerned, the advantage was instantaneous on the morning of the first day of January, when the law went into effect, and the inventive genius of the American people has already shown that there will be many demands for this new product in industries which have not been heretofore in existence in the United States.

A single extract from the report of the British Parliamentary commission made on this subject last year, shows that there need be no anxiety whatever in regard to frauds on the revenue in the operation of the law. Quoting from their general conclusions, they say:

We think, however, that having regard to the practical security that is provided for the revenue by the process of denaturing adopted in the case of this spirit, the regulations in regard to distribution might be appreciably relaxed in respect of the quantities that retailers may keep in stock, or may sell at any one time to a customer. We recommend that the regulations should be left to be prescribed from time to time by the board of inland revenue, instead of being stereotyped in the statutes.

This is a conclusion drawn from fifty years' experience, and necessitated also, I may add, by the keenness of German and French competition, and by the new danger of American competition in the international market in such products as require alcohol in their processes of manufacture.

It is true that our lack of experience with this article will compel, for a time, perhaps, more stringent regulations than some of the other countries have in effect, but it is equally true that these regulations can be modified from time to time, as our own experience may show that such changes can be made

The one important, and indeed vital, object to be secured now and at the very start is to prevent monopoly in production and distribution for this article, which is not only a necessity for manufacturing purposes, but which is sure to come into extensive use for fuel, light, and power. Manufacturers of stoves, lamps of all kinds, motor boats, automobiles, and farm machinery, are even now busily engaged in preparing to adjust their types to the use of this new fuel, and improvements have already been made in some of these things over like articles now in use in Europe.

The fixed carbon found in coal and oil once consumed can never be reproduced, but the supply of spirits can be renewed with each recurring crop produced from the soil. In that production there can be no monopoly, unless the terms of the law render that monopoly possible. Our duty is to open it to the widest possible competition.

Mr. GRAFF. Mr. Chairman, I may not prevent the passage of this bill, but it seems to me a bill which may affect seriously the revenues of the Government in a direction from which we now collect $140,000,000 can properly be examined by this House before we legislate to make a radical change. We collect $90,-000,000 of this $140,000,000 from neutral spirits and alcohol, and the internal-revenue laws and regulations, under which the manufacture of spirituous and malt liquors is conducted, have not been the development of a day, but have been the product of experience and amendment and improvement year by year since the days of the civil war, and scandal and fraud have not been absent from that experience, for in the early imposition of a large tax upon spirituous liquors there were tremendous frauds, and it was known at that time that the Government lost a very substantial portion of the tax to which it is entitled. Finally through the years there has been built up a system that is without parallel in its perfection in the line of policing and control.

Mr. SHERLEY. And also without parallel in its tyranny.
Mr. GRAFF. Every distillery now being operated is practically under the control, night and day, of a Government inspector—either a gauger or a storekeeper. Every room of that distillery is under lock and key, the key being in the hands of a United States officer, and the distiller himself can not enter those premises without the presence and permission of that officer, night or day. In addition to that—

Mr. MADDEN. Will my colleague yield for a question?

Mr. MADDEN. Will my colleague yield for a question?
Mr. GRAFF. Yes.
Mr. MADDEN. Is it your idea that the manufacture of alcohol which is eventually to be denatured should be confined to the distilleries now in existence or which may hereafter be constructed by the whisky trust?

Mr. GRAFF. No; that is not my idea, so far as that is concerned; but it makes no difference whether the so-called "whisky trust" is in favor of this legislation or against it. The question is, What is the interest of the Government, and what is fair and right?

As a matter of fact the organization popularly known as the whisky trust produces, I am informed, about 40 per cent of the alcohol which is manufactured in the United States, and the remaining so-called independent distillers produce about 60 per cent of it. But I do think, after we have passed this legislation and it has been in operation only since the first of the last month, that it is well for us to let it be operated until the next session of Congress and see what we can learn in the light of experience, when we come to deal with so delicate a question as the laws and regulations governing the control of this product from which we derive so large a portion of the total national

Any person can build a distillery and operate it, but it ought to be compelled to abide by the same regulations as all others in the manufacture of its product, which is precisely the same in all of its constituent elements as the product which is made by the distillers which never is denatured. I think that all of the safeguards ought to be thrown around the manufacture of the production of alcohol which is destined to be denaturized until it is denaturized, and then, and not until then, should the safeguards be thrown aside.

Now, the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. HILL] has become so intoxicated over the prospects of the German system of little locked distilleries upon small farms of a few acres in Germany, where men in the country are glad to get 25 or 30 cents a day for labor, where the product of these little distilleries is sold to one company or a combination alone, where the denaturing is done at one central point in that little country, that he thinks that system can be transplanted to the United States of America with its great territory, its larger population, where, if this is a success, there must necessarily result a great deal larger proportion of business in that particular line.

Now, about the expense. The gentleman was asked how many little locked distilleries would be established in the cornfields of the West. He could not answer. Why could he not answer? Because there is nothing in the condition of the farmers of the great West which will enable them to enter successfully into competition with the large manufacturer of alcohol any more than the small manufacturer in any other line of business can enter into successful competition with the large manufacturing interests having a larger capital and having more improved machinery, having great facilities for economy, and having better means for the regulation of the entire business. I say that it is an exceedingly dangerous bill, and I was surprised that the Treasury Department, through the Secretary of the Treasury and the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, finally concluded that they would recommend an amendment to this free-alcohol legislation so soon after the law went into operation.

Now, what is the next thing that is proposed to do by the bill besides the creation of these small distilleries which are to be operated under special regulations not applicable to the larger distillery? Why, it is proposed to permit the establishment of bonded denatured warehouses at central points away from the distillery premises, and, then, in order to make these denatured warehouses available, a permit is here given to ship in bond the alcohol, while it is still potable and before it is denaturized, over long distances to these points where these denaturing bonded warehouses are situated to be there denaturized.

Now, then, the Internal-Revenue Department already has had experience with general bonded warehouses. A few years ago they permitted men to have a general bonded warehouse at a distant point away from the distillery and permitted the shipping of liquors in bond to those distant bonded warehouses, but this trial of the Government of such warehouses resulted in their discontinuance because the general bonded warehouse afforded an opportunity for fraud.

Remember that you are permitting under this bill the shipment of this alcohol when it is in exactly the same condition that the alcohol is which bears a tax of $1.10 a gallon—in the same condition before it is denaturized-over long distances in tank cars to be denaturized at distant points. I say that we ought to wait until the next session of Congress and see what the result of this bill will be as it is drafted.

What important legitimate end can be subserved? Is it not apparent that the denaturing process can be done not only more safely for the Government, but more cheaply for the consumer and purchaser, at the distillery denaturing warehouse on the distillery premises than at a distant denaturing ware-house? The expense to the Government is much less under the present regulations and law than it would be under the proposed change.

There is nothing to prevent any man from assembling capital and building a distillery and devoting its entire capacity to the making of alcohol, to be denatured if he wants to, now, and all he is subject to is the same regulation and safeguard that every other distillery has to submit to now. Distillers think that to-day there are some 800 illicit stills in the United States, against which they have to compete, that smuggle their products to points in the neighborhood. This will open up an opportunity by fraud for a person at some place far removed from dense population and from town or hamlet to pass around that alcohol to his neighbors before it goes through the denaturing proc-I do not anticipate, for my part, any disastrous results to existing distilleries from the competition between the small distillery and the up-to-date modern distillery situated in the city, conducted on business principles, with the most modern machinery and the most complete equipment. There is no danger from that sort of competition; but this is simply indulging in a wild dream without any other effect whatever than to furnish an opportunity for fraud, in my judgment.

I have as many farmers in my district as any of the rest of these gentlemen have, farmers that raise more corn to the acre, or as much to the acre, as in any other district in the United States, but at the same time I am conscious of the fact that farming has gotten to be an exclusive business itself, requiring all the energies, time, and ability of the men engaged in the business. It has got to be somewhat of a scientific pursuit, and the farmers do not need to have offered to them an opportunity to earn a few cents a day on rainy days when they are not oc-cupied with their regular occupation. Farming calls upon every energy of every farmer, and I am glad to say calls upon his energies and ability with profit to himself. It is perhaps one of the most profitable avocations now in the United States, all things considered; and to say that he practically is going to be induced to go into the distilling business as a side line is well-nigh ridiculous to my mind. There are few farmers to-day in the corn States who kill their own beef for family consumption, but they patronize the butcher and sell their beef on the hoof. In my judgment to hold out false hopes of profits by engaging in a distinct manufacturing business is neither complimentary to their business sagacity nor discernment.

Every means on the farm are being used to-day to save labor by the introduction of mechanical devices, because even machinery when it is expensive is cheaper than too much hand labor. Denatured alcohol started at 36 cents per gallon, and labor. Denatured alcohol started at 36 cents per gallon, and with the first thirty days of its production has dropped to 30 to 31 cents per gallon, with a stiff demand before the distilleries have fairly started, and I believe it would be well for the Government to have the present safeguards from fraud remain for the period until next session before further changes in the law are made.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Chairman, here we are again with another bill for which nine-tenths of the votes on this floor will be given and no amendment whatever will be permitted. This is a bill which applies to some portions of the United States and does not apply to certain other portions of the United States. It provides for the creation and operation of distilleries unlimited in number and not described in size or capacity. have to operate under the commerce clause of the United States Constitution or else will be void in certain States of the Union; and if it does operate in those certain States under the commerce clause, then certain laws and constitutions of certain States will be found to be worthless and inoperative.

It is a law to provide, as I have said, for the erection and operation of distilleries to distill alcohol from any and all sorts of material. It licenses and authorizes these establishments in all the States and Territories of the Union where the laws of Congress operate. It will be inoperative in Iowa, Kansas, Maine, North Dakota, and wherever else we have statutory or constitutional prohibition, for, if I understand those laws correctly, they make it unlawful within the territory of the States thus enacting the statutes to manufacture or sell any spirituous, vinous, or malt liquors. The prohibition, of course, in all these States goes to every intoxicating liquor. So it will be seen that the farmers of those States will not enjoy the great boon of this bill unless the constitutions and laws of those States shall have been amended.

Mr. MARSHALL. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. GROSVENOR. Certainly. Mr. MARSHALL. We have a provision in our constitution which prohibits the manufacture of intoxicating liquors. However, it has been held by our ablest lawyers-not by the courts, however; but I have no doubt it will be in view of what the lawyers tell us—that the manufacture of denatured alcohol is a continuous process, and would not come under the provisions of the constitution of the prohibition States.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Let us see. The manufacture of alcohol for the purpose it is used—to make another commodity—is not violation, is it? Well, all I have to say is that they are wonderfully adroit lawyers. A continuous process! Well, there is a point of time when it is alcohol, is there not? And it is put into a tank, and it is hauled away to a central place, and there it is manufactured into whisky to be drank or manufactured into denatured alcohol for the use of the manufacturer. The manufacture of the alcohol is completed at the distillery in the back yard of the farmer. It is true that it is drawn off into a tank, but it has to be taken out of that tank and carried a distance, generally many miles away, to a central place, where, under some sort of regulations hereafter to be made, the commodity is to be used as one of the ingredients of a compound, a creation to be called "denatured alcohol." What is the difference in law or common sense between the taking of that alcohol from the distillery and carrying it to be put through this process or carrying it to be put through any other process to create a beverage, to create a medicine, to create a per-fumery, to be used in the manufacture of hats and other manufactures? None whatever, it seems to me, although I confess the proposition had not occurred to me. It seems to me, beyond a reasonable doubt, that the manufacture of alcohol for any purpose in the world within prohibition States and within territory where local option is operative will have the effect to produce a severe collision between the authority of the United States and the authority of the State. How can it be otherwise? In most of the States where local option has been adopted by counties the prohibition is against the manufacture and sale of every form of intoxicating liquor. How can it be said that the farmer or any other man may manufacture alcohol within that territory, and because it is intended to be used for some other purpose than drink to claim that he can evade the law?

Mr. STANLEY. Mr. Chairman, I would like the gentleman to tell me how he is going to make whisky out of alcohol.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I do not propose to have anything to do with that enterprise, but I remind the gentleman from Kentucky that alcohol can be made into a drink, intoxicating and dangerous. I think I can come as near making it out of alcohol as the gentleman can when he gets hold of any other kind of liquor. He does not know what it is made of nor do I. Doctor Wiley could probably post both of us, but that is not the real

To-day at the end of this long experience of the Government running way back there are and always have been large frauds upon the revenues. I refer now to the hearings before the Ways and Means Committee, and there never was an estimate given by the Treasury Department that was concise and certain as to what the effect of this bill would be on the revenues of the Government, but under the law as we passed it a year ago, in the first session of this Congress, there could be a kind of limitation put upon the expense to the Government of superintending this operation. Now, what are we going to have? Every man who desires it can have a distillery out in his back yard, down in his cellar, out in his potato patch, or out in the woods somewhere—anywhere. He will run it, perhaps; perhaps not. Moonshining is going on to-day all over the United States, not alone in the mountains of Tennessee and Kentucky and North Carolina, not by any manner of means. It is going on in the most civilized States of the country, in those States where the Pharisees of the people claim to be the most accurate in obedience to the laws of the country. I do not discriminate in this description by my own opinion against any of the States of the Union. What will you have when you have a machine authorized by the Government of the United States by which the farmer can run a distillery by day on alcohol and run by night on something else?

Are we all getting too good for frauds? I only want to leave a word of warning behind me. I believe that the arguments made by the gentleman from Connecticut, growing out of his travels in Germany, are of very little value in this country. Germany regulates the weight of a loaf of bread; Germany regulates every movement of her citizens; Germany puts her official eye upon every act of the manufacturer of every kind of arti-We have nothing reaching any such point in this

Now, I have no doubt that out of this commodity of departured alcohol we are to have some great benefit to manufactures of the country, but I think it would have been exceedingly wise for us to have waited for a year and to have ascertained what the operation of this law is to be. What is to be the diminution of the income of the Government? Nobody makes an estimate with any assertion of certainty. How many inspectors will it require? Already in the Senate statement has been made that inspectors of various kinds are necessary to the enforcement of laws already put upon the statute book, and that the number has increased in a year, or a little over a year, from 700 to 3,000. Is it not a safe prediction that we shall add 3,000 more to the roll by the passage of this bill? Let us see. There are forty-six States, practically, in the Union, and the baby State in our great organization will doubtless have more distilleries per capita than any other one of the States if she produces the material out of which alcohol is so readily made. Suppose we go ahead with this proposition; is it not a low estimate to say that it will require thirteen inspectors in every Congressional district in the United States? And if so, you have added 5,000 to the pay roll of the Government. Directly it will be cheaper, I fear, to buy the ready-made alcohol and give it to the farmers of the country to produce their "light, heat, and power," than it will to support this mighty framework of official espionage.

It has been urged repeatedly here that the opposition to this bill comes from the Standard Oil Company and the whisky trust and brewers' trust. Now, this subject has been agitated before the Ways and Means Committee for more than a year, and divers persons appeared before the committee in opposition to the passage of the bill, but I beg to state that no man living, in my judgment, has ever heard a word of opposition from the Standard Oil Company or the whisky trust. On the contrary, it is within my personal knowledge that the whisky trust, through its representatives and friends, strongly urged the passage of the original bill and for reasons which do not take a very wise man to understand.

Over and over again we have asked the gentlemen who have appeared before us what they knew about the possibility of the restoration of this commodity back to an article that could be used as a drink, and while they answered that they had no knowledge that it had been done, not a man has ever said that he did not fear that it might be done later on. How could you destroy a thing by a process of this character and leave it impossible of restoration? I do not know how you can do it. I do not undertake to say it will be restored, but it seems to me before we establish a distillery upon every farm in the United States, where one sees fit to establish a distillery and add to the great army of Government officials, we ought to wait and go slowly. You can not find in the hearings before the Ways and Means Committee an estimate of the number of officials that it would take to run this machinery

Mr. Chairman, I do not want to be misunderstood. I am in favor, strongly and earnestly in favor, of giving to the manufacturers of the United States the benefit of the use of alcohol free of tax in the process of manufacture. I am in favor of every step that conserves the true interests of the Government and protects the people of the country against fraud and wrong-doing in this behalf. Therefore I would have waited for one year and let the process develop. Already denatured alcohol is making its appearance everywhere, not at 15 cents a gallon, which the distinguished representative of the Grange who came here from New Hampshire and spoke, as he always speaks, for a great body of intelligent farmers of the country without their knowledge—not at 15 cents a gallon, but 60 to 75 cents a gallon; and strange enough, Mr. Chairman, right here in this city you can find, not the vile stuff called denatured alcohol that we have had described, not the offensive odor and the bitter characteristic, not that, but a commodity mild and gentle, sweet and attractive in every respect, which you would never imagine was deleterious and poisonous, and yet it is sold as denatured alcohol and branded with the brand of poison. We ought to have waited a year and given to science an experiment as to the full scope of operations, to ascertain how many distilleries would be proper and fair, how many of these central denaturing establishments we ought to have. We say now five, not in one district, I bewe ought to have. We say now nve, not in one distributed lieve. Perhaps that is too many, perhaps too few. Why could we not have waited? It seems to me, therefore, unwise, and we not have waited? It seems to me, therefore, unwise, and the not have the in the long run I fear that it will be injurious rather than beneficial, but we must bow to it and submit to it and hope

Mr. HILL of Connecticut. I yield one minute to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CLARK].

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, all I have to say about it is that this bill makes it possible for the farmers of the United States to take advantage of the bill that we passed here last session. It removes it out of the bounds of possibility to corner this article. They want it, the committee wants it, and everybody wants it except the whisky trust, the wood-alcohol trust, and the coal-oil trust. [Applause.]

Mr. LOVERING. Mr. Chairman, after most careful consideration and consultation with representatives of the farming interests, among whom I would especially mention the master and legislative committee of the National Grange, Patrons of Husbandry, it is my belief that very great injury to the agricultural and manufacturing interests of the country would result if the additional denatured alcohol legislation recommended by the Ways and Means Committee fails of enactment at this session. Without this additional legislation the farmers will be prevented from securing the full measure of those benefits which they rightly expect to derive from tax-free denatured alcohol, and alcohol will be heavily handicapped in its competi-tion with kerosene and gasoline. Failure on the part of Congress to enact this legislation would result in further inciting the anger of the people of the entire Northwest, already in-flamed by reports that the law as it now stands is in the interest of monopoly. The farmers are determined that no obstructions shall be allowed to prevent alcohol, the farm liquid fuel, from having an absolutely square deal in competition with petroleum products.

With the enactment of this legislation conditions for the rapid development of the industrial uses of alcohol will, I believe, be practically as perfect as they can be made under the present necessity of protecting the revenue of $150,000,000 annually derived from the taxed beverage spirits.

The enactment of these amendments, which will make the United States denatured alcohol laws even more perfect than those of Germany, marks the beginning of an industrial revolu-tion of enormous magnitude, a revolution which I confidently predict will in a few years place our country far in the lead of all industrial alcohol-using nations.

With that revolution the farmer is indissolubly identified, for alcohol is but another name for farm products. Every 23 gallons of alcohol used in the industrial arts will provide a new market for a bushel of corn or its equivalent in other farm prod-This is true whether the alcohol is used in any of a thousand different manufacturing processes, in the development of new manufacturing industries, in displacing gasoline in the cigar lighters of the hundred thousand retail dealers, or in any of the many other petty industrial uses; in the aristocratic chafing dishes, or ornamental lamps, or power boats, or pleasure vehicles of the rich, or in its broader uses as an illuminant to displace the ill-smelling and disagreeable kerosene, or as a cooking fuel to displace the dangerous gasoline in our farm homes or in the homes of the people, or as a power fuel to run farm engines, or the million other small engines that must be used in the boats of our giant fishing industries, and in other industrial work in factories, and in transporting both by land and water. The uses of alcohol extend into almost every industry and are too varied to briefly summarize in any adequate manner. It would, in fact, require an encyclopedia to properly enumerate the industrial uses of alcohol.

In view of such potentialities and practical possibilities, how absurd, how ignorant the cry that the farmer has been "buncoed" or that he has been deceived, and that the free-alcohol law, even as it stands, can be of no practical benefit to him.

Wipe out all the fuel uses of alcohol and consider its manufacturing possibilities alone, and it would be a great benefit to the farmer and worth all the effort it has cost.

Alcohol being a farm product it should call for no argument to show that the farmer is deeply interested in encouraging its industrial use in every possible way. Every cent in the reduction in the price of alcohol to manufacturers means a large increase in manufacturing demand, and one improvement alone in the methods of handling, that of allowing shipping in tank cars, will reduce the wholesale cost from 4½ to 5½ cents per gallon, and that of transmitting from one storage tank to another, or from storage tank to tank cars or to small packages will reduce the cost 1 or 2 cents additional. It is easy to see what an enormous stimulus to the consumption of alcohol in all places remote from sources of supply will result from these improve-While the farmers want to clear away all obstructions ments. to the rapid development in the uses of alcohol in the rural districts, they also want every obstruction cleared away which will prevent the rapid development in its use in manufacturing in the cities and on our lakes, rivers, and harbors.

In common with every Congressman representing an agricultural district, I have been simply deluged with letters from my constituents expressing fear that the farmer has been betrayed, and that both the law and regulations have been drafted in the interest of the large distiller, and are such as to make easy the building up of a monopoly of industrial alcohol manufacture and distribution. Many papers which circulate in my district have been constantly printing statements calculated to excite distrust. Although continuous efforts have been made by representatives of the Grange and other well-informed friends to explain the errors of these statements, they are repeated persistently.

when the three statements, they are repeated persistently.

Who is to profit by it? To whose advantage is it to thus discredit this legislation? What interests are there that can profit if the manufacturers of alcohol lamps and stoves are induced by such scare methods to delay manufacturing alcohol-burning appliances and the public demand for such things is checked? Only, so far as I can see, those who have so long enjoyed practically a monopoly of the liquid fuel supply, and who will count their profit by millions for every month's delay in the time when this dangerous rival to kerosene and gasoline becomes a serious competitor in the market.

How serious a competitor to kerosene denatured alcohol is likely to be when production and distribution is perfected can perhaps be better realized by considering for a moment conditions as they exist now. The present retail selling price of kerosene of fair illuminating quality varies from 12 to 35 cents per gallon, averaging in the great central section of the country west of the Missouri River and east of the Rocky Mountains about 20 to 22 cents. The same quantity of denatured alcohol will burn more than twice as long as kerosene. Alcohol can therefore compete with kerosene if sold for double the price; that is to say, unless kerosene prices are reduced alcohol for lighting purposes is a good commercial proposition at prices varying from 24 to 70 cents per gallon, and the present market quotations for denatured alcohol in single-barrel lots, f. o. b., New York City, is 35 cents per gallon gross, or deducting allowance for the return of empty barrels 32 cents, and this one month from the day the law went into effect and fifteen days after the first deliveries were made in New York City and before a normal price level has been reached.

With the tank cars and locked pipes and distribution arrangements perfected and normal conditions established the price will undoubtedly be reduced an additional 8 or 10 cents per gallon; that is to say, as soon as the additional legislation is enacted by Congress alcohol will be selling at a price of commercial competition with kerosene at its present lowest selling

This is far from being the most favorable showing that can be made for alcohol based upon the present selling prices. Governor Bachelder, master of the National Grange, informs me that a new lamp which they have investigated shows an economy in the use of alcohol in proportion to the amount of light given much more favorable than the 2 to 1 comparison with kerosene which I have used. The safety, cleanliness, and other desirable qualities of alcohol all tend to give alcohol a commercial advantage over kerosene. All these things show that the kerosene-oil interest has good reason to fear the illuminant.

Under such circumstances and considering the reputation the Standard Oil Company has of using every available means of preventing competition, it is at least reasonable to suspect that its publicity bureau is being well worked in the attempt to misinform the public and incite activity along lines calculated to retard, rather than to advance, the march of alcohol into general use.

The enactment of legislation providing for the locked tanks in the distillery proper of distilleries of less than 100 gallons daily capacity, intended for producing alcohol for denaturing purposes only, removes the last possible objection to the law as unfavorable to the small distiller. I want, however, to caution everyone who really desires to see rapid progress made in the use of industrial alcohol to give careful study to the orders in which such use would most likely naturally develop. There is a natural order of procedure.

No local distillery can be made profitable before a local demand for denatured alcohol has been created. Utensils for using alcohol must first be supplied, and that involves the organization of new industries and a tremendous movement in manufacturing alcohol burners, stoves, heaters, engines, etc. The big distilleries are bound to be first in the field, for their market is general, and it is all the same to them whether the demand for any one place is for 1 barrel or 5,000 barrels. Small local distilleries must at first of necessity depend on local demand, and it will not be profitable to establish a local distillery until the local demand for denatured alcohol has reached somewhere near to the minimum output at which a distillery can be profitably operated. Who knows how small a distillery can be profitably operated? I do not, although I have for some time past been making investigations for the purpose of finding out. I am convinced that it is well within the limits of making practical the establishment of small distilleries in reach of every farm. My opinion is that the big distilleries will necessarily occupy the entire field at first, but that ultimately, and very quickly at that, the farmers' cooperative or small company distilleries will supply the smaller cities, villages, and country, leaving the big distilleries to supply the cities' demand.

In view of this indefinite knowledge about the size of distilleries, etc., and that the establishment of small distilleries is not a matter of the immediate moment, how sane the attitude of the National Grange and the Patrons of Husbandry generally in this matter. The national master of the Grange, in his annual address at Denver last November, recommended (1) that the regulations be given a fair trial and changes only insisted upon after a full knowledge of all the facts; (2) that the members of the Grange do all they could to stimulate a large sale of alcohol lamps, stoves, and other alcohol appliances, and (3) that they urge the agricultural colleges and experiment stations to immediately experiment with the view of securing exact data regarding small distilleries and the alcohol value of the various kinds of farm products, waste materials, etc. If the people, and the farmers in particular, want to secure quickly the blessings of cheap alcohol, they will do well to copy after the Patrons of Husbandry and follow the advice of the worthy master of the National Grange.

The uses to which alcohol can be put will vary according to the price, and the price of alcohol is bound to be abnormally high during the first few months, and possibly during the best part of the first year. The manufacturing demand is large and will undoubtedly grow rapidly. How many millions of gallons this will take no one knows. At present it is taxing the supply to the utmost. Manufacturers can, and if necessary will, pay two or three times the price at which it would be profitable to use it for fuel. As an illuminant it is profitable at double the price it would be as a power fuel, and it can compete with kerosene for lighting at any price at which it is likely to be sold.

The beauty and simplicity of the alcohol light insures for it a large demand among the rich and well to do. These will willingly pay a premium in order to secure a supply of alcohol at the earliest possible time. A gallon of alcohol used for lighting will go as far as 2 gallons of kerosene. The potential demand for alcohol burners for lighting runs into the millions, and alcohol for this use must be freely supplied before it will drop in price sufficiently to be generally available for other fuel uses. The alcohol cooking stove is superior to the oil or gasoline cooking stove, and the consumer of alcohol for such domestic use can and will, if necessary, pay a higher price for alcohol than the power user under ordinary circumstances can afford to do. Millions of gasoline and oil stoves are in use. Before alcohol can be sold at a price that will make it competitive with gasoline as a power fuel, except in remote places where gasoline is abnormally high, it will be a serious competitor with gas in all cases where gas sells above $1 per 1,000 cubic feet. Free alcohol is a monopoly smasher in more ways than one. Alcohol will probably come into use as a motor-car fuel last of all; first, on the water, where the use of gasoline is most dangerous; second, in remote districts, where the cost of competing fuels is abnormally high; then in those places where the safest fuel is most urgently demanded, and possibly in a more general way at first when mixed with gasoline or other liquid fuels.

Mr. Chairman, I hope this bill will pass and become a law.

Mr. HILL of Connecticut. Mr. Chairman, I ask that general leave to print may be given Members of the House for five legislative days on this matter.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that that can not be given in committee.

Mr. HILL of Connecticut. Then I will ask it in the House.
Mr. MANN. I would suggest to the gentleman it would be well for the Clerk to read the bill.

Mr. HILL of Connecticut. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the bill may be now read by paragraphs.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Chairman, I ask leave to extend my remarks in the Record.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. GRAFF. Mr. Chairman, I make the same request.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the same leave will be granted to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Graff]. [After a pause.] The Chair hears no objection. The Clerk will now read the bill by paragraphs.

The Clerk read as follows:

Sec. 2. That the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, may authorize the establishment of central denaturing bonded warehouses, other than those at distilleries, but not exceeding five in number of such central plants in any one collection district, to which alcohol of the required proof may be transferred from distilleries or distillery bonded warehouses and in which such alcohol may be stored and denatured. The establishment, operation, and custody of such warehouses shall be under such regulations and upon the execution of such bonds as the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, may prescribe.

The committee amendments were read, as follows:

Section 2, lines 7 and 8, after the word "distilleries," strike out the word "but not exceeding five in number of such central plants in any one collection district."

Also, in line 9, same section, after the word "warehouses," insert "without the payment of internal-revenue tax."

The committee amendments were agreed to. The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out all of section 3 and insert a new section to read as fol-

Strike out all of section 3 and insert a new section to read as follows:

"Sec. 3. That alcohol of the required proof may be drawn off, for denaturation only, from receiving cisterns in the cistern room of any distillery for transfer by pipes direct to any denaturing bonded warehouse on the distillery premises or to closed metal storage tanks situated in the distillery bonded warehouse, or from such storage tanks to any denaturing bonded warehouse on the distillery premises, and denatured alcohol may also be transported from the denaturing bonded warehouse in such manner and by means of such packages, tanks or tank cars, and on the execution of such bonds, and under such regulations as the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, may prescribe. And further, alcohol to be denatured may be withdrawn without the payment of internal-revenue tax from the distillery bonded warehouse for shipment to central denaturing plants in such packages, tanks and tank cars, under such regulations, and on the execution of such bonds as may be prescribed by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury."

The committee amendment was agreed to

The committee amendment was agreed to

The Clerk read as follows:

Insert a new section, section 5.
"SEC. 5. That the provisions of this act shall take effect on September 1, 1907."

Mr. HILL of Connecticut. I move the adoption of the final amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HILL of Connecticut. Mr. Chairman, I move the committee do now rise, and report the bill as amended favorably to the House.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and Mr. DALZELL, Speaker pro tempore, having resumed the chair, Mr. Boutell, the Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that the committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 24816, the denatured-alcohol bill, and had directed him to report the same back to the House with sundry amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to, and that the bill as amended do pass

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is a separate vote demanded upon the amendments? If not, the vote will be taken en gross.

The question is on agreeing to the amendments.

The question was taken; and the amendments were agreed to. The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. Hill of Connecticut, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table. Mr. HILL of Connecticut. Mr. Speaker, I ask general leave to print for five legislative days.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. Hill] asks unanimous consent that leave to print be granted for five legislative days.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I understood the request to be leave to print remarks upon this bill.

Mr. HILL of Connecticut. I agree to that, The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

REPRINT OF REPORT.

Mr. WEBB. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for a reprint of House Report No. 7304, entitled "The jurisdiction and authority of Congress over the subject of woman and child labor."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection? There was no objection.

NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 24925, the naval appropriation bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Foss] moves that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the naval appropriation bill. Is there objective.

There was no objection.

My. FOSS. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and Mr. Dalzell, as Speaker pro tempore, having resumed the chair, Mr. Sherman, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that the committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 24925, the naval appropriation bill, and had come to no resolution thereon,

Mr. BOUTELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent— Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, before we go into that I want to reserve points of order on the naval bill-or have they been reserved?

Mr. BOUTELL. They have been reserved.

SOUTH CAROLINA SCHOOL FUNDS.

Mr. BOUTELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill S. 8065, and ask that it be considered in the House as in the Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the title. The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 8065) to provide for the transfer to the State of South Carolina of certain school funds for the use of free schools in the parishes of St. Helena and St. Luke, in said State.

Mr. BOUTELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill may be considered in the House as in the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. MANN. Not to-night.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BOUTELL] asks unanimous consent that the bill be considered in the House as in the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, I hope the gentleman will not insist upon it.

Mr. BOUTELL. If my colleague will yield for a moment, I will say that this is a matter in which I have no personal interest, nor has the committee any personal interest in it. It is a matter in which the State of South Carolina is interested, and the legislature of South Carolina is about to adjourn pending the enactment of this law paying over to the State of South Carolina a trust fund now held by the National Government.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I tried to get a copy of that bill at 12 o'clock, but could not do it, and I object.

SENATE BILL WITH HOUSE AMENDMENTS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, Senate bill 925 (with House amendments), for the construction of a steam vessel for the Revenue-Cutter Service for duty in the district of Puget Sound, was referred to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

House joint resolution No. 3. [Introduced by Mr. Van Osdel.]

House joint resolution No. 3.

[Introduced by Mr. Van Osdel.]

A joint resolution memorializing Members of Congress to indorse and assist President Roosevelt in his efforts to secure equitable adjustment of transportation charges and check the unlawful encroachments of monopolistic trusts and combinations.

Be it resolved by the house of representatives of the State of South Dakota (the senate concurring):

Whereas the attention of the nation is centered upon the efforts on the part of its Chief Executive to bring the railroad corporations of the country under the operation of just statutory regulations with the purpose of securing such adjustment of freight-transportation charges as will give to each producing and commercial interest an equal opportunity in the markets of the world;

Whereas the Chief Executive has officially declared himself in favor of equitable rail-transportation charges, to the end that no individual or combination of individuals shall have trade advantages over any other individual or combination of individuals, and to the further end that the nation's producers may secure to themselves the full value of the results of their toil;

Whereas the Chief Executive has caused the officials of the Department of Justice to proceed in the courts against monopolistic combinations commonly called "trusts" and has manifested a desire for the strengthening of the laws where they are found to insufficiently guard the public against the encroachments of monopoly;

Whereas the Chief Executive is understood to favor some modifications of the tariff laws of the nation as will deprive monopoly of the shelter it may enjoy: Therefore.

Resolved by the senate and house of representatives of the legislature of the State of South Dakota, That the Senators and Representatives of Congress from the State of Dakota are requested to shape their official action as to place the State in hearty accord with the policies of Theodore Roosevelt, President of the United States, in connection with the questions enumerated in

A joint resolution memorializing Members of Congress to indorse and assist President Roosevelt in his efforts to secure equitable adjustment of transportation charges and check the unlawful enhancement of monopolistic trusts and combinations.

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA, STATE OF OREGON, OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY OF STATE.

I. F. W. Benson, secretary of state of the State of Oregon and custodian of the seal of said State, do hereby certify that the annexed pages contain a full, true, and complete copy of house joint memorial No. 1, with the indorsement thereon, filed in this office January 29, 1907.

In festimony whereof I have hereunto set my hand and affixed hereto the seal of the State of Oregon.

Done at the capitol, at Salem, Oreg., this 31st day of January, A. D.

F. W. BENSON, Secretary of State. House joint memorial No. 1.

To His Excellency the President and honorable Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America:
Your memorialist, the legislative assembly of the State of Oregon,

Your memorialist, the legislative assembly of the State of Oregon, most respectfully represents:

That certain lands lying in Sherman County, Oreg., and other counties in said State were by act of Congress granted to the State of Oregon to aid in the construction of a militarry wagon road from The Dalles City, on the Columbia River, to Fort Boise, on the Snake River, which act is approved February 25, 1867.

That under a decision rendered by Hon. Hoke Smith, formerly Secretary of the Interior, it was held that said lands in Sherman County and in Wasco County, Oreg., were included in an overlap of the grant of the Northern Pacific Railway Company and were not lands granted to aid in the construction of the said military wagon road, and that settlers could acquire title to the same under any of the land laws of the United States.

That under said ruling of said Hon. Hoke Smith a large number of settlers, particularly in Sherman County, Oreg., settled upon, improved, made entry upon, and many of whom made final proof in support of their claims, and received United States patent therefor.

That thereafter a decision of the Supreme Court of the United States was rendered in effect that said lands belong to the Eastern Oregon Land Company, a corporation, grantee by mesne conveyances from the State of Oregon to said lands, granted as aforesaid, and the title of said settlers to said lands failed, compelling them to either abandon their said lands or purchase paramount title thereto.

That a large number of people, particularly in said Sherman County, Oreg., have suffered great financial loss by reason of the matters aforesaid.

That Hon. John M. Gearin, Senator from Oregon, on May 25, 1906.

Oreg., have suffered great financial loss by reason of the matters aforesaid.

That Hon. John M. Gearin, Senator from Oregon, on May 25, 1906, introduced in the Senate of the United States an amendment to the bill making appropriation for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1907, and for other purposes, which said amendment would aid in affording relief to said settlers.

That said settlers are unable to sustain the loss thus incurred, and it is believed to be the policy of the General Government that its citizens shall not suffer loss by reason of mistakes made by officers of the General Land Office or other Departments.

Therefore your memorialists most earnestly and respectfully ask that justice be done to the said settlers, and that said amendment referred to be favorably acted upon by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States and his Excellency the President, or that other efficient law be speedily enacted for the relief of the said settlers.

That this memorial be forwarded to the President and to our Senators and Representatives in Congress by the secretary of state, with the request for the immediate passage of a law in keeping herewith.

That the Senators and Representatives from the State of Oregon be, and they hereby are, requested to use their utmost endeavor to secure relief for said settlers.

Senate joint memorial No. 4.

To the honorable Senate and House of Representatives, Congress of the United States:

United States:

GENTLEMEN: Your memorialists, the legislative assembly of the State of Oregon, would respectfully and earnestly represent to your honorable body that the pension granted to the veterans of the Oregon Indian wars of 1847, 1848, 1855, and 1856, to wit, $8 per month, is inadequate to the deserts and reeds of the few of these old veterans who remain with us as living evidence of the patriotic work performed by them.

That the claims of these men to national recognition and gratitude have been already acknowledged by State and nation, but in fixing their reward the spirit of economy was largely the controlling influence and the pensions allowed them entirely too small; that by a ruling of the Commissioner of Pensions the veterans of the civil war, on account of age and disability, are paid a pension of $12 per month, as is just and due, yet the same rule is not applied to the veterans of the Indian wars above referred to.

We therefore urge upon your honorable body the passage of a bill granting to the veterans of the Indian wars above mentioned an increase of pension to the sum of $12 per month, thus placing the veterans of all these wars upon the same footing as respects the amounts paid them by a grateful people.

The number of the survivors of all Indians-war veterans is now small, they are old and decrepit, and their ranks are fast becoming depleted, and we feel that their services to State and nation have been sufficient to warrant the payment to them of the pension equivalent to that paid the survivors of the civil war.

It is hereby directed that a copy of this memorial, duly signed by the president of the senate and the speaker of the house, and attested by the chief cierks of the two houses, be forthwith forwarded to each of Oregon's Senators and Representatives in Congress.

To the legislature of the State of Oregon:

To the legislature of the State of Oregon:

Your memorialists, members of Camp No. 17, Indian War Veterans, in session at Albany, Oreg., January 11, 1907, respectfully represent to your honorable body the following: That

Whereas the Indian war veterans of the Pacific coast, who in manhood's prime went forth at the call of duty and through great hardships and danger, and often in hunger and cold, fought and prevented the devastation of the Oregon country at the hands of merciless savages, but now, in fast lessening numbers, whose bent forms and tottering steps proclaim the near-by end of thier life's journey, and numbers of whom are in very destitute circumstances; and

Whereas on account of age disability alone civil war veterans, younger in years, are receiving $12 per month pension:

Therefore we earnestly ask that the Congress of the United States shall increase the pension of Indian war veterans from $8 to $12 per month; and Further, we ask that you take favorable action and present our petition to Congress in due form.

Adopted by the senata January 20, 1907.

FRANK DAYEY, Speaker.

ROBERT LANSDON,

ROBERT LANSDON, Secretary of State.

House joint memorial No. 1. By Freehafer.

To the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States in Congress assembled: Your memorialists, the legislature of the State of Idaho, respectfully

Your memorialists, the legislature of the State of Idaho, respectfully represent that—

Whereas a bill is now pending in Congress having for its purpose the granting of pensions to the participants, or their widows, in what is known as the "Battle of Beecher Island:" Now, therefore,
Your memorialists urgently recommend that said bill be enacted into law. Said legislation is necessary, for the reason that the participants in said battle were civilian scouts enlisted and recruited by Col. George Alexander Forsythe, and were known as Forsythe's scouts; that there were in number about fifty of said scouts, including their officers, and at a point known as Beechers Island, in the State of Colorado, a battle was fought with the Indians on September 17, 1868; that said scouts and their officers were surrounded by more than one thousand Indians for nine days and nights; that five of said scouts were killed and twenty-one wounded, and the survivors suffered untold agony; that only a small number of said scouts survive to this day, and that practically all of them, and the widows of the deceased scouts, are in straitened circumstances financially; that had they been regularly enlisted in the United States Army they would long since have been receiving pensions; but on account of the irregularity of their enlistment and the nature of the service which they rendered their country, they are not entitled to pensions under the general law. For this reason a special bill has been introduced in Congress for their relief.

Your memorialists therefore earnestly recommend that said bill be passed in order that these men and their widows may receive that recognition to which they have always been entitled but which they have never received.

This joint memorial passed the house of Representatives on the 14th day of January, 1907.

J. Frank Hunt, Speaker of the House of Representatives.

J. FRANK HUNT, Speaker of the House of Representatives.

This joint memorial passed the senate on the 22d day of January, 1907.

E. A. BURRELL, President of the Senate.

Mr. DUBOIS presented the memorial of John J. Kennedy and sundry other citizens of Nez Perce County, Idaho, remonstrating against the enactment of legislation requiring certain places of business in the District of Columbia to be closed on Sunday; which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. KEAN presented petitions of sundry citizens of Pleasantville, Salem, Westfield, and Rutherford, all in the State of New Jersey, praying for the enactment of legislation to regulate the interstate transportation of intoxicating liquors; which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented a petition of sundry citizens of South Orange, N. J., praying for a continuance of the Bureau of Biological Survey in the Department of Agriculture; which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. BURKETT. I present a memorial of the legislature of Nebraska, which I ask may be read and lie on the table.

The memorial was read, and ordered to lie on the table, as

Whereas there is now pending in Congress a measure in the interest of the great ship companies, known as the ship-subsidy bill; and Whereas such a measure is a direct grant of special privilege and not in the interest of the people, and undoubtedly opposed by more than nine-tenths of the people of Nebraska: Therefore, be it Resolved by the Senate of Nebraska; That our Senators be instructed and Representatives in Congress be requested to work and vote for the defeat of such measure or any like bill; and Resolved, That the secretary of the Senate be instructed to forward a copy of these resolutions to each Senator and Representative in Congress and to those who have been elected but who have not yet taken their seats.

I move the adoption.

Res. 224) directing the Secretary of Commerce and Labor to investigate and report to Congress concerning existing patents granted to officers and employees of the Government in certain cases, reported it without amendment.

Mr. WARNER, from the Select Committee on Industrial Expositions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 7382) to encourage the holding of an Alaska-Yukon-Pacific Exposition at the city of Seattle, State of Washington, in the year 1909, reported it with amendments, and submitted a report thereon.

FORT BERTHOLD INDIAN RESERVATION LANDS.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I am directed by the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 24473) to define the status of certain patents and pending entries, selections, and filings on lands formerly within the Fort Berthold Indian Reservation in North Dakota, to report it favorably without amendment. A similar Senate bill has been passed by the Senate. The two bills are precisely alike. I ask for the consideration of the bill now reported.

The Secretary read the bill; and there being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I move that a similar bill, which has heretofore passed the Senate, the bill (S. 7495) to define the status of certain patents and pending entries, selections, and filings on lands formerly within the Fort Berthold Indian Reservation in North Dakota, be recalled from the House of Representatives

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

BLACK RIVER (ARKANSAS) BRIDGE.

Mr. BERRY. I am directed by the Committee on Commerce. to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 23578) to authorize the county of Clay, State of Arkansas, to construct a bridge across Black River at or near Bennetts Ferry, in said county and State, to report it favorably without amendment. I should like to have unanimous consent for the present consideration of the hill.

The Secretary read the bill; and there being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SYSTEM OF TEMPERANCE EDUCATION.

Mr. GALLINGER. Senate Document No. 171, Fifty-eighth Congress, second session, being a reply to the physiological subcommittee of the committee of fifty, is entirely out of print, and as there are many calls for it I move that 1,000 additional copies be printed for the use of the document room of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to.

AGRICULTURAL BANK IN PHILIPPINE ISLANDS.

Mr. LODGE. I desire to give notice that on Monday next, immediately after the routine morning business, I shall call up the bill (8.6249) to provide for the establishment of an agricultural bank in the Philippine Islands—not to interfere with appropriation bills, of course.

MEMORIAL ADDRESSES ON THE LATE REPRESENTATIVE MARSH.

Mr. CULLOM. I desire to give notice that to-morrow at 4 o'clock I shall call up the resolutions of the House commemorative of the life, character, and public services of Gen. B. F. Marsh, late a Representative from the State of Illinois, which are now upon the table.

SPECIAL EMPLOYMENT IN EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENTS.

Mr. TILLMAN. I send to the desk a resolution for which I ask immediate consideration.

The resolution was read, as follows:

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury, the Attorney-General, the Secretary of the Interior, the Secretary of Commerce and Labor, the Secretary of Agriculture, and the Interstate Commerce Commission are hereby severally directed to report to the Senate at the earliest moment possible the number and names of all persons employed by them or under their authority in their several Departments during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1906, or who are now so employed as special agents, attorneys, inspectors, employees, or otherwise, where no specific appropriation in detail has been made by Congress for such employment or only made in general terms, and also to report in every case the amount paid, or to be paid, as compensation, and make a specific statement of the nature of the employment in each case.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the

Mr. CLAPP. I move to amend the resolution by including a statement whether such employees are in the classified service

Mr. TILLMAN. I accept that.
The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated. Mr. TILLMAN. I suppose "employees" would cover it, but let it read "such persons.

Mr. CLAPP. Very well.

Mr. CLAPP. Very well.
Mr. HANSBROUGH rose.
The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolution will be so modified.
Mr. HEYBURN. I should like to have that portion of the resolution read which specifies the Departments to which it is directed.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. That is the purpose for which I rose.

Mr. HEYBURN. Let the enumeration be read. Mr. HANSBROUGH. I rose to ask that it be read. I want

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I rose to ask that it be read. I want to know whether the Department of the Interior is included?
Mr. TILLMAN. Surely; it is there.
Mr. HEYBURN. And the Department of Agriculture?
Mr. PATTERSON. I ask that the entire resolution be read.
The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolution will be read as modified.

The Secretary read the resolution as modified, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury, the Attorney-General, the Secretary of the Interior, the Secretary of Commerce and Labor, the Secretary of Agriculture, and the Interstate Commerce Commission are hereby severally directed to report to the Senate at the earliest moment possible the number and names of all persons employed by them or under their authority in their several Departments during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1906, or who are now so employed as special agents, attorneys, inspectors, employees, or otherwise, where no specific appropriation in detail has been made by Congress for such employment or only made in general terms, and also to report in every case the amount paid, or to be paid, as compensation, and make a specific statement of the nature of the employment in each case, and also whether such persons are in the classified service.

Mr. CADTED. It suggest to the Senator the preprint of like.

Mr. CARTER. 'I suggest to the Senator the propriety of likewise calling for the allowances in lieu of subsistence, so as to read "compensation and allowances."

Mr. TILLMAN. I am perfectly willing to get anything in the way of information regarding this extraordinary expenditure that is going on in nearly all the Departments.

Mr. CARTER. I move that the resolution be amended by adding, after the word "compensation," the words "and allow-

Mr. TILLMAN.

Mr. TILLMAN. I accept that amendment. The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolution will be so modified. Mr. HEYBURN. I suggest to the Senator introducing the resolution the propriety of inquiring as to what fund these special agents are paid out of. We have some funds that are called "floating funds," and which accumulate and are not accounted for at all, the expenditures from which are made purely upon an Executive order.

Mr. TILLMAN. I think that feature of the resolution has been covered, but if the Senator wants to suggest an amendment which will more fully cover it, I will accept it.

Mr. HEYBURN. It is suggested that it is already covered by the language of the resolution, so I will make no further suggestion.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the resolution as amended.

Mr. MALLORY. Has the amendment proposed by the Senator from Minnesota been adopted?

Mr. TILLMAN. About the classified service?
Mr. MALLORY. Yes. Has that amendment been adopted?
Mr. TILLMAN. It has been adopted.
Mr. MALLORY. I should like to inquire if there is any objection to having the Department of Justice included in the inquiry?

Mr. TILLMAN. It is there already—the Attorney-General.
Mr. MALLORY. I did not hear that portion of the resolution

Mr. TILLMAN. It is there.

Mr. HEYBURN. It is suggested that the language may possibly not cover the inquiry as to the fund from which the special agents are paid. I wish to amend the resolution by adding "and shall report from what fund such special agents and employees are paid."

Mr. TILLMAN. I am perfectly willing to accept that amendment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The Secretary. It is proposed to add at the end of the resolution "and shall report from what fund such special agents and employees are paid."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from South Carolina accepts the amendment?

Mr. TILLMAN. I accept the amendment.
The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the resolution as modified.

The resolution as modified was agreed to.

KEEP COMMISSION REPORT.

Mr. WARREN submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the President be requested to communicate to the Senate, if not incompatible with the public interests, a copy of the report recently made by the so-called Keep Commission upon the methods of administration of the Department of the Interior.

FISH CULTURAL STATION IN DELAWARE

Mr. DU PONT. I ask unanimous consent for the consideration of the bill (S. 8074) to establish a fish-hatching and fish-culture station in the county of Newcastle, Del.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported by the Committee on Fisheries with an amendment, in line 7, after the word "at," to strike out "such location within the county of Newcastle, State of Delaware, as shall be deemed by the Commissioner of Fish and Fisheries to be most suitable, convenient, and advantageous for the purposes of said fish-hatching and fish-culture station" and insert "some suitable site within the county of Newcastle, State of Delaware, to be selected by the Secretary of Commerce and Labor;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the sum of $25,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, be, and the same is hereby, appropriated for the establishing of a fish-hatching and fish-culture station, including purchase of site, construction of buildings and ponds, and equipment, at some suitable site within the county of Newcastle, State of Delaware, to be selected by the Secretary of Commerce and Labor.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

RAILROAD STATISTICS.

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President, I desire to present a Senate resolution and to ask for its immediate consideration. In the meantime I beg the indulgence of the Senate for a moment.

On January 28 I presented a resolution, which was adopted by the Senate, calling upon the Interstate Commerce Commission for information respecting the employment and work of Charles S. Hanks. On yesterday the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. Tillman] presented a resolution somewhat upon the same lines, which was adopted by the Senate, and to-day a much broader resolution of inquiry has been adopted looking to the special employment of persons by the Executive Departments of the Government. That, of course, is a very important question, Mr. President.

It is reported that within the past few years, probably during the term of the present Administration, the number of special employees who have no fixed legal status and whose employment is not regulated by law has increased from 700 to 3,000.

The importance of the question, Mr. President, is to know whether ours is becoming a mere personal Government or is While that is of consequence, and I am concerned one of law. with it, Mr. President, I am also concerned with the statement of Mr. Hanks, which he has reiterated since this matter was first considered by the Senate, that he presented facts to the Interstate Commerce Commission indicating that the passenger and freight rates charged upon interstate traffic might be reduced 10 per cent without injustice. Upon that point the answer of the Interstate Commerce Commission to the resolution I introduced was not at all satisfactory, because it did not present copies of the papers and documents referred to them by Mr. Hanks. I therefore, Mr. President, offer and ask for the immediate consideration of the resolution which I send to the desk, seeking to secure the data presented to the Commission by Mr. Hanks

The VICE-PRESIDENT: The resolution submitted by the Senator from Texas [Mr. Culberson] will be read.

The Secretary read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That the Interstate Commerce Commission be, and it is hereby, directed to send to the Senate copies of the "various papers, documents, and figures" which were prepared by Messrs, Hanks and Harriman, and which are referred to in the answer of the Interstate Commerce Commission to Senate resolution shown in Senate Document No. 285, this session.

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to.

A. BOSCHKE.

Mr. PERKINS. I submit the resolution which I send to the desk, and ask for its immediate consideration.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolution will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

Resolved, That the bill (8. 5336) for the relief of A. Boschke, with all the accompanying papers, be, and the same is hereby, referred to the Court of Claims for a finding of facts under the terms of the act of March 3, 1887, and generally known as the "Tucker Act." That any testimony, affidavits, and other papers on file in either House of Congress relating to said claim shall be considered by the court as competent evidence and such weight given thereto as, in its judgment, is right and proper. right and proper

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. SPOONER. Let the resolution be again reported, Mr. President

Mr. KEAN. I inquire if the resolution has been reported by a committee?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. Spooner] is recognized. Does he yield to the Senator from New Jersey

Mr. SPOONER. I merely ask that the resolution be again reported.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will again read the resolution.

Mr. PERKINS. I ask that the resolution be referred to the Committee on Claims. A similar bill has passed the House of Representatives and is now pending before the Committee on Claims, and I ask that this particular resolution may be referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. SPOONER. Pending that, I renew my request that the resolution be again reported.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will again read the resolution, at the request of the Senator from Wisconsin.

The Secretary again read the resolution of Mr. Perkins. Mr. ALDRICH. What is the request, Mr. President? The VICE-PRESIDENT. The request is for the present consideration of the resolution.

Mr. ALDRICH. I think it had better go to the Committee on

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolution will be printed and referred to the Committee on Claims.

PATENTS OF GOVERNMENT, EMPLOYEES.

Mr. DANIEL submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved by the Senate of the United States, That the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy be, and they are hereby, directed to inform the Senate what officers or employees of their respective Departments have obtained patents in the United States or in any foreign country for any invention during their service, stating their names and rank; what are the present assignments of such officers, if now in the service; what are the patents they have obtained, and naming the articles patented, if any, which are in use in the Army or Navy of the United States, and the extent of such use.

THE PHILIPPINE ISLANDS.

Mr. FRAZIER and Mr. CLAPP addressed the Chair.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair would state that the morning business is closed, and that there is a resolution on the table, coming over from yesterday, which will be stated by the Secretary.

The Secretary. Table Calendar No. 7, Senate resolution 249, submitted by Mr. CLAY.

Mr. CLAY. Mr. President, the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. FRAZIER] desires to address the Senate this morning, and as the resolution heretofore submitted by me will necessarily lead to some debate, I ask that it may lie on the table, subject to my call, as I desire to submit some remarks on it.

Mr. LODGE. And my motion to refer the resolution goes over with it.

Mr. BLACKBURN. That is right.
Mr. CLAY. Very well.
The VICE-PRESIDENT. In the absence of objection, it is so ordered.

STATE PUBLIC SCHOOL SYSTEMS.

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President-

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President, I desire to ask the Senator from Tennessee, in view of the fact that we have nearly completed the consideration of the Indian appropriation bill, if it would not be agreeable to him to let us now take up that bill, with the understanding that it will not prejudice his right to proceed at the close of the consideration of the bill.

Mr. FRAZIER. I will ask the Senator how long the Indian appropriation bill will probably take?

Mr. CLAPP. Of course, that is impossible to state.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Minnesota yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. CLAPP. I do. Mr. BACON. I do not think the Senator from Tennessee ought to be asked to accede to that suggestion. The Senator from Tennessee gave notice that he would address the Senate on yesterday, and he yielded at that time for the consideration of the Indian appropriation bill. There is no possible way in which it can be anticipated how long the Indian bill will continue before the Senate before it can be concluded, and so I think the Senator from Tennessee ought not to be asked to make any further concession in the matter.

Mr. CLAPP. I think, Mr. President, the Senator from Georgia [Mr. Bacon] is probably not fully apprised that this would not be as disagreeable to some as it might seem. I do not press the matter in any spirit of opposition to the wishes of the

Senator from Tennessee

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, I have no objection to yielding to the Senator from Minnesota for the consideration of the Indian bill, but I wish to have it understood that in doing so I shall not lose my privilege, and that I shall be recognized at the conclusion of the consideration of that bill.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

H. R. 24816. An act to amend an act entitled "An act for the withdrawal from bond tax free of domestic alcohol when rendered unfit for beverage or liquid uses by mixture with sultable denaturing materials," approved June 7, 1906, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Finance.

H. R. 24991. An act making appropriations for the construcion, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce,

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

I move that the Senate proceed to the consider-Mr. CLAPP. ation of House bill 22580, making appropriations for the Indian Department, etc.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 22580) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department, for fulfilling treaty stiputhe fixed year ending June 30, 1908.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President—
Mr. BURKETT rose.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Minnesota yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. CLAPP. Certainly.

Mr. BURKETT. I was just going to discuss the question of the point of order that has been raised on the amendment in relation to the Omaha Indians, unless the Senator from Minnesota has something else that he wishes to proceed with at this time.

Mr. CLAPP. I wish to recur to page 110 of the bill, line 7, where the Secretary of the Interior is designated. I move to amend by striking out the word "Interior" and inserting in lieu of it the word "Treasury."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment to which the Senator moves his amendment has been heretofore agreed to. Chair understands the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. Clapp] now moves that the Senate reconsider the vote by which the amendment on page 110, beginning at line 7, was agreed to for the purpose of offering an amendment thereto. Without objection, the motion to reconsider will be regarded as agreed to and the amendment as being open to further amendment. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Minnesota will be stated.

The Secretary. On page 110, line 7, after the words "Secretary of the," it is proposed to strike out "Interior" and insert the word "Treasury."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. CLAPP. Now the Senator from Nebraska may proceed. Mr. BURKETT. Mr. President, at the time we adjourned last evening the Senate had reached the consideration of the committee amendment on page 83 of the bill, and the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. Kean], as I recall, interposed a point of order against it. I do not just know what is the point of order the Senator makes, but I take it, as he had spoken of it the day before, that the point was made against the amendment on the ground that it is a claim. In running over Rule XVI of the Senate I find it reads thus:

4. No amendment the object of which is to provide for a private claim shall be received to any general appropriation bill, unless it be to carry out the provisions of an existing law or a treaty stipulation, which shall be cited on the face of the amendment.

Mr. KEAN. I call the attention of the Senator to the fact that the amendment is also open to the point of order that it is general legislation.

Mr. BURKETT. Well, I find that all through the other sections of that rule the same verbiage is used, that if an amendment is to carry out some existing law or treaty stipulation it would be in order.

Passing over to something else in relation to this amendment, I desire to call the attention of the President to the ruling of the Chair on a similar amendment which was introduced last year with reference to the Kickapoo Indians on the date of April 25, 1906.

I may also say, while I have not the RECORD at present before me, that I understand that the Quapaw Indian claim for the carrying out of the provisions of the treaty with the Quapaw Indians, almost identical with this, was held in order some time previously.

With reference to this amendment, I desire to state that while it is perhaps in the nature of a claim, yet I say it is to adjust a claim arising under a treaty stipulation. In 1854 the Omaha Indians owned what now constitutes twenty counties in thé northeastern corner of Nebraska. By a treaty which the Government made with those Indians the Indians ceded that land to the United States, with the provision that they were to retain a certain territory north of a certain line, and with the further stipulation that if the Indians were not able to live north of that particular line, they were to have 300,000 acres given to them on the Missouri River at a point farther south, and they were to be paid 14 cents an acre for the difference between the 300,000 acres they were to get and the territory which they gave up north of this line.

There has always been a controversy with reference to this treaty. It has never been adjusted. It has been disputed, and the Commissioner of Indian Affairs states in his letter that he thinks it would be better to have the matter go to the court and have it adjusted.

I also desire to say, in connection with that, that the provision of the treaty provided that the United States should erect for the Omahas at their home a gristmill and a sawmill, and agreed to keep the same in repair; that it would provide a miller for ten years, erect a blacksmith shop, supply tools, and keep it in repair for ten years, and would pay the blacksmith for that period; that it also would furnish them an experienced farmer for ten years to instruct the Indians in agriculture. One of the things the Indians claim is that this promise has never been carried out.

Mr. President, I think I am perhaps laboring under a misapprehension. I do not know whether I am addressing the point of order to the Chair or to the Senate, for I do not know which is to rule upon the merits of it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair will hear the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. BURKETT. As I was stating, the amendment that I am urging is to carry out the treaty of 1854, and I shall be as brief as I can.

As I have stated, before that treaty the Omaha Indians owned what now constitutes twenty counties in the State of Nebraska. By that treaty the Omaha Indians ceded to the United States all this territory except a certain strip over on the north side of the State. There was a provision in the treaty that if the Indians did not care to use this land on the north border, they should give it up to the Government and should have 300,000 acres, which I have somewhat outlined, at a point farther down the Missouri River. When the time came for the Indians to go and settle on this portion of the land, the Sioux Indians were so annoying that the Omaha Indians refused to accept that land and went down the river and accepted the 300,000 acres. There were about 800,000 acres of land, as near as can be estimated-although that is one of the disputed points—in the land up the river. Accordingly, the Indians claimed there were nearly 500,000 acres difference between the land that they gave up and what they received, and the terms of the treaty are specific that for that difference they are to receive 14 cents an acre.

As I also stated, the treaty which I have here, provided that the Government was to supply these Indians with a farmer, a miller, and a blacksmith and pay them certain amounts of The Indians have always contended that these provisions of the treaty were never carried out, and it is not disputed at all so far as I have heard that the provision of the treaty, with reference to the 14 cents an acre excess which the Indians gave up over what they received, has never been settled for.

Moreover, there was another provision in this bill. The Government paid the Indians $840,000, the payments extending over a period of forty years. By the terms of this treaty it was to be paid as the Government directed. There is a disputed amount of $15,000 that was embezzled, as the Indians have always claimed, and never paid to them-embezzled, as it is claimed, by an Indian agent.

So growing out of this treaty is the question of the excess land-about 500,000 acres, at 14 cents an acre, amounting to about $70,000-involved, and also the question of whether or not the Government did supply a blacksmith shop, a blacksmith, an agricultural teacher, a farmer, a sawyer, and a miller, and also the proposition of the amount that was embezzled, and perhaps some others.

As I stated in the beginning, and I wish it understood, this is right in line of the provision that was passed in the bill a year ago-on the 25th of April, 1906-when the point of order was raised against it, and the amendment was held to be in order. I have that citation here. It is also in line with the provision that was added for the Quapaws for the purpose of adjusting the treaty. It is in accordance with the provision of the rule for carrying out the provisions of an existing law or treaty stipulation. In short, it refers to the Court of Claims to adjust finally all this disputed matter arising out of the treaty with the Omaha Indians, and I submit that the proposed amendment is a proper one in its nature and in order upon this

If the Chair desires the reference of the precedent, I will state that it was on April 25, 1906, and will be found in volume 40, page 5809, of the Congressional Record.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, the point of order made against the amendment in relation to the Mexican Kickapoos was on the ground that it provided for a private claim. If I understand it, the Chair then held that it was not obnoxious to the point of order if it fulfilled the conditions imposed by the rule. If that is his view as to this case I shall make the point of order that the amendment is general legislation, which I think it clearly is.

Mr. PATTERSON. Mr. President, I certainly do not think there is any force in the last suggestion made by the Senator from Massachusetts. "General legislation" is a blanket that will cover every act of Congress, if that is the meaning of "general legislation," as found in the rule.

Mr. LODGE. I was intending to explain my point, Mr. Presi-

Mr. PATTERSON. I beg the Senator's pardon.
The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. Lodge] has the floor.

Mr. LODGE. I had not given up the floor.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. LODGE. I will yield the floor entirely, Mr. President. Mr. PATTERSON. I desire to suggest, in connection with the fourth paragraph of Rule XVI, that that provides for a specific class of cases, a specific class of amendments, and that, by every rule of interpretation, amendments that come within the class set out or suggested in paragraph 4 are not subject to the point of order that they are general legislation. The language

4. No amendment, the object of which is to provide for a private claim, shall be received to any general appropriation bill, unless—

I ask the attention of the Chair to this particular languageunless it be to carry out the provisions of an existing law or a treaty stipulation, which shall be cited on the face of the amendment.

It follows from necessity that if the amendment is to carry out the provisions of an existing law or a treaty stipulation and the law or stipulation is stated on the face of the amendment, then it is, under the rule, an amendment that is not objection-

It is the equivalent of saying that no amendment the object of which is to provide for a private claim shall be received to any general appropriation unless it be to carry out the provisions of existing law or a treaty stipulation, which shall be cited on the face of the amendment. Under the well-known rule expressio unius est exclusio alterius this is expressly provided for under the rules, and if this is a private claim, and if it is made to carry out the provisions of a law or an existing treaty, no objection can be made to its attachment to a general appropriation bill.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I think myself that this amendment is obnoxious to the rule in regard to private claims. vate claims are expressly declared out of order by the rule for the very obvious reason that if they are to be loaded upon appropriation bills there is no proper opportunity for the coordinate branch, the House, or the Executive to pass upon their merits, and hence they are explicitly excluded. The exception is made only when the treaty or law is set forth on the face of the amendment. The rule says "which shall be cited." I call the attention of the Chair to the fact that in lines 15 and 16 no specific treaty is cited. It simply says "under any treaties or laws of Congress," making it perfectly general and not citing the treaty or the law, as the rule requires. I think, therefore, the amendment does not come within the exception which the rule against the admission of private claims permits and establishes

But, Mr. President, I think there can be no doubt in the world that on the point of general legislation the amendment is clearly out of order. At least it seems so to me. The test of general legislation is that fixed by the House rule and by the language of the House rule, which I think is very much better language than ours. The test is a change in existing law. There is no doubt that this amendment changes existing law. Moreover, it applies not to a special claim, but provides

That all claims of whatsoever nature which the Omaha tribe of Indians may have or claim to have against the United States * * under any treaties or laws of Congress.

There could be no more general legislation than that. Therefore I make the point of order that it is general legislation of the most obvious kind.

Mr. BURKETT. To meet the objection of the Senator from Massachusetts, I suggest that the amendment be amended by inserting after the word "under," in line 15—

Mr. CLARK of Montana. What page?
Mr. BURKETT. Page 83, line 15, after the word "under," the words "the treaty of March 16, 1854, and."
Mr. LODGE. And strike out the words "any treaties or laws of Congress?"

Mr. BURKETT. I will say to the Senator that the Department tells us in a report that there are many things between these Indians and the Government, and that they ought all to be taken up and settled at one time. I do not think, as a matter of fact, there are any other treaties than this one.

Mr. LODGE. That does not cure the difficulty. It leaves it perfectly general still—"under any treaties or laws." It cites one treaty.

It is no pleasure to me to make points of order on these claims, but I think it is very bad practice to put claims on appropriation bills. The rules are specific on that point. They name private claims, and they name nothing else in this exclusion; and the policy of the rule is clear that a private claim ought to have separate consideration. That is the principle which underlies the rule which selects that specific class of measures and makes them out of order.

I do not myself think that the amendment of the Senator from Nebraska affects the point of order I made, but I do not wish to rest on that point of order, as I think the amendment is clearly general legislation, and I make that point of order.

Mr. BURKETT. I will say to the Senator from Massachusetts in reply to that suggestion that this is an Indian matter. It is a matter of importance. It is a matter of legislation which should be enacted. It pertains to this special claim that has been pending here. Now, the mere fact that this has been kicking around Congress for a good many years is evidence of the impracticability of getting a matter of this sort before the Senate under an independent bill. If this were to come in on a separate bill, there would not be any time to consider it. One Senator or another would ask that it might go over to a more opportune time, and at the close of the session the bill would die. In short, when we have appropriation bills up we expect to take up matters that ought to be acted upon and discuss them and consider them and enact them into law, because we can not do it anywhere else so well.

As to the consideration which this matter has received, I will say to the Senator that it was before the Committee on Claims. It is a claim. It was recognized as such by the Senate. It was sent to the Committee on Claims. A subcommittee was appointed to consider it. They reported it favorably. before the Committee on Claims, and the action of the Committee on Claims was favorable to the reference of it to the Court of Claims for a finding of the facts. Then it was introduced as a proposed amendment to the pending bill and was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

The Committee on Indian Affairs gave it a hearing, and those representing the Indians appeared before the committee and were heard. I appeared before the committee and made a few remarks explanatory of the matter. So the Committee on Indian Affairs has considered this matter and put it on the pending bill. The Committee on Claims has considered the matter, and has voted to refer it to the Court of Claims for the finding So it has not been without consideration. there is hardly any other portion of the bill which has received more consideration and by more different Senators than this particular amendment.

We watched yesterday the Senate, in its great anxiety to do justice to the Indian and protect him, refuse to let Mr. Indian handle his own property—property which, in my judgment, the Government never had the right nor the authority, either morally or legally, to lay its hand upon. But in the great anxiety of this body that Mr. Indian should be treated fairly and protected in his property interests we voted down an amendment which the committee recommended after a subcommittee had gone into the Territory and considered it. In our anxiety I say, to protect the interest of the Indian in his property that

Here is a matter of a treaty, a solemn compact and agreement entered into by the Government of the United States and these Indians, in which the United States got twenty counties of the best part of the State of Nebraska and the most fertile soil in the world in the Missouri Valley. The Government entered into certain other agreements to pay those Indians money at such time as was stipulated in the agreement. The Government agreed solemnly to furnish them a carpenter, a sawyer, a farmer, and various other things. The Indians claim that the Government has not done it; that the Government has not paid them the money which it agreed to pay; that it did not give them the amount of land within 500,000 acres that the Government There is no dispute about this last item, and the Department is without authority to adjust this matter. For years—since 1854—those Indians have been knocking at the door of Congress for some kind of legislation that would put them somewhere—before some one with authority to adjust these differences and settle them. I do not know in just what amount it may be determined that the Government is indebted to the Indians, but I am willing and Mr. Indian is willing to let a court of the United States say how much it is.

The Secretary of the Interior in his report says that for a long time these Indians have been dissatisfied and have been complaining. They have come here year after year, to Congress after Congress, and have asked us to give them an opportunity to be heard, that their differences might be adjusted. It seems to me that we can not be asked less than to let this matter go through on the pending bill, for there is not a Senator herewho does not realize that if it does not go through on this bill, those Indians are doomed for all time to come, for all the generations in the future to content themselves with knocking at the door of Congress asking Congress to do what is just and right toward them in the matter of this claim.

Now, I undertook to show at the beginning that, in my judgment, this amendment is absolutely and unquestionably in It does not do for the Senator from Massachusetts or for the Senator from New Jersey to rise and say that it is out of order because it is a claim, and then for some other Senator to rise and say if it is not out of order because it is a claim, then it is out of order because it is general legislation. It is either one or it is the other, but by no possible reasoning can it be urged that the amendment is objectionable to the rule with respect to private claims and that it is also objectionable to the rule with respect to general legislation.

Mr. LODGE rose.

Mr. BURKETT. I will yield in a moment. If, sir, a claim of this sort had been objectionable, why did the framers of the rule make a special provision for private claims? Private claims are not general legislation, and there is no process of reasoning by which you can make them general legislation. fact is that this is a claim by this Indian tribe against the Gov-If it was not to carry out a stipulation in a treaty which the United States made, there is not any doubt that the amendment would be objectionable to that rule. But the rule specifically says that private claims which are for the carrying out of treaty stipulations are permissible as amendments to general appropriation bills. And when the Senate, in making that rule, inserted that special provision, they recognized the fact that they wanted to eliminate claims from the contemplation of that paragraph with reference to general legislation.

Now if the Senator from Massachusetts wishes to interrupt me, I will be glad to yield.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I am surprised to hear the Senator from Nebraska announce the proposition that an amendment can not be out of order except on one ground, and that you are debarred, because you make a point of order on one ground, from making another point of order on another ground. An amendment may easily be obnoxious to the rule on several grounds. My own opinion is that this is obnoxious to the rule on two, and one, of course, is just as fatal, if it is held to be good, as if both are held to be good.

But on the question of a claim to carry out the stipulations of treaty, the rule meant to exclude private claims. dian claim must arise under a treaty or a law. The rule says where it is to carry out the stipulation of a treaty, but this is a dispute between the Government and the Indians. It shows it on its face. The bill itself has been to the Committee on Claims, recognized as a claim, and has been by them, I understand, referred to the Court of Claims, as either House has the power to do with such matters. But, Mr. President, the fact that two points of order are made does not affect the merits of either. Each must be judged on its own merits.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question presented by the point of order is not entirely free from difficulty. It raises in a general way the point which has run through many of the objections interposed to many of the amendments upon the pending bill and which have been heretofore decided by the

The Chair is impressed by the statement of the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. Burkett] with the merits of the claim itself, and it would seem that the subject-matter is one which should strongly appeal to Congress for some relief. That, however, is not a matter for present consideration. The Chair is convinced, from a careful analysis of the amendment, that it falls within the classification of general legislation. Jurisdiction is conferred upon a judicial tribunal, and rules of practice are laid down by it. It is provided what shall be regarded as evidence in the consideration and determination of the claim in the

The Chair therefore holds that the amendment is obnoxious to the rule which excludes amendments which propose general legislation upon general appropriation bills. If the Chair is in error, of course an appeal lies to the Senate from his decision.

Mr. BURKETT. Mr. President, with all deference and respect to the Chair, for certainly no discourtesy can even be remotely inferred from an appeal, since the Senate seems to have voted on the merits of these cases quite as much as on the merits of the points of order, I appeal from the decision of the Chair.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is, Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the Senate? [Putting the question.] By the sound the ayes seem to have it. have it, and the decision of the Chair stands as the judgment of the Senate. The next passed-over amendment will be stated. The Secretary. On page 26, after line 10, it is proposed to

The Secretary. On page 26, after line 10, it is proposed to insert:

That legal and equitable jurisdiction be, and the same is hereby, conferred upon the Court of Claims to hear, determine, and render final judgment, with right of appeal as in other cases, in a certain cause entitled "The White River Utes, the Southern Utes, the Uncompangre Utes, the Tabeguache, Muache, Weeminuche, Yampa, Grand River, and Uinta bands of Ute Indians, known also as the 'Confederated bands of Ute Indians of Colorado,' against the United States,' being Congressional, No. 11248, pending in said court by reference under Senate resolution dated December 11, 1903; and in rendering said judgment the court shall embrace therein the value of all lands whereof disposition has been made for cash, and also for lands which have been withdrawn from the public domain and set apart as public reservations or for forest or timber land reserves or for other public uses under existing laws or proclamations of the President of the United States, and for all sums due to the confederated bands of Ute Indians, the complainants in said cause of action, under the terms of the act of Congress approved June 15, 1880, being "An act to accept and ratify the agreement submitted by the confederated bands of Ute Indians in Colorado, for the sale of their reservation in said State, and for other purposes, and to make the necessary appropriations for carrying out the same; said action shall proceed under its present title and pleadings filed, with right of amendment, and shall be conducted by the attorney of record now appearing in said cause or by any attorney by him specifically authorized to appear, and the Attorney-General shall continue to appear and represent the United States, and in rendering final judgment the court shall fix the compensation of the attorneys on behalf of plaintiffs, not exceeding 15 per cent of the amount of said judgment, which compensation shall be awarded for said attorneys who have rendered actual services in conducting the said caus

Mr. PATTERSON. Mr. President, as I suggested the other day when the amendment was tentatively before the Senate, it is a matter in which my colleague [Mr. Teller] takes a very deep interest and has from the first, because he has been associated with the treaties and the legislation that related to these bands of Indians ever since dealings with the Indians commenced. The amendment is for the purpose of carrying into effect a treaty between the United States and the Confederated bands of Ute Indians, and it so expressly states in the body of the amendment. I desire to call the attention of the Chair to the specific language of the amendment on that subject. Commencing in line 11 on page 26, it reads as follows:

conferred upon the Court of Claims to hear, determine, and render final judgment, with right of appeal as in other cases, in a certain cause entitled "The White River Utes, the Southern Utes, the Uncompangre Utes, the Tabeguache, Muache, Weeminuche, Yampa, Grand River, and Uinta bands of Ute Indians, known also as the Confederated bands of Ute Indians, known also as the Confederated bands of Ute Indians of Colorado, against the United States," being Congressional, No. 11248, pending in said court by reference under Senate resolution dated December 11, 1903; and in rendering said judgment the court shall embrace therein the value of all lands whereof disposition has been made for cash, and also for lands which have been withdrawn from the public domain and set apart as public reservations or for forest or timber land reserves or for other public uses under existing laws or proclamations of the President of the United States, and for all sums due to the Confederated bands of Ute Indians, the complainants in said cause of action, under the terms of the act of Congress approved June 15, 1880, being "An act to accept and ratify the agreement submitted by the Confederated bands of Ute Indians in Colorado, for the sale of their reservation in said State, and for other purposes, and to make the necessary appropriations for carrying out the same."

So here is a claim of the Confederated bands of Ute Indians arising under a treaty which is specifically set forth and the act of Congress by which that treaty was ratified.

There is additional language in the amendment to which I desire to call the attention of the Vice-President and the Senate because I wish to have it so amended as that no objection upon the score of justice or equity may stand against it. The lan-guage to which I refer pertains to the allowance of attorneys' fees, and is as follows:

Said action shall proceed under its present title and pleadings filed, with right of amendment, and shall be conducted by the attorney of record now appearing in said cause or by any attorney by him specifically authorized to appear, and the Attorney-General shall continue to appear and represent the United States, and in rendering final judgment the court shall fix the compensation of the attorneys on behalf of plaintiffs, not exceeding 15 per cent of the amount of said judgment.

With the consent of the chairman of the committee, I move to strike out the words "not exceeding 15 per cent of the amount said judgment.

Mr. CLAPP. There is no objection to that.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Colorado proposes an amendment to the amendment, which will be stated.

The Secretary. In line 19, page 27, it is proposed to amend the committee amendment by striking out-

Not exceeding 15 per cent of the amount of said judgment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PATTERSON. Then commencing in line 25, page 27, I move to strike out, if it has not already been stricken out, all after the word "Treasury" down to and including the word "Indians," in line 3, on page 28. in line 3, on page 28.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Colorado proposes an amendment to the amendment, which will be stated.

The Secretary. After the word "Treasury," in line 25, page 27, it is proposed to strike out the words:

Out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to be reimbursed to the United States from the funds of the Confederate bands of Ute Indians.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PATTERSON. The provision of the amendment relating to attorneys' fees as amended will read as follows, and I desire the attention of the Senate to it.

And in rendering final judgment the court shall fix the compensation of the attorneys on behalf of the plaintiffs, which compensation shall be awarded for said attorneys who have rendered actual services in conducting the said cause, upon a quantum meruit, in the name of the attorney of record in said cause, or any attorney by him specifically authorized, and shall be paid to him from the proceeds of said judgment by the Secretary of the Treasury.

So, without reference to any contracts between the attorneys and the Ute Indians, the attorneys in this litigation are to be paid solely upon the quantum meruit, and, as a matter of course, the Court of Claims will determine the amount the attorneys are to receive.

Mr. LODGE. Let me ask the Senator a question, so that I may see if I understand his amendment. Does he strike out all after the word "Treasury?"

Mr. PATTERSON. The first amendment commences in line 18, on page 27, and strikes out all after the word "plaintiffs down to and including the word "judgment," in line 19.

Mr. LODGE. Does it then go on as it now reads?

Mr. PATTERSON. Then it strikes out the language after the word "Treasury," in line 25, down to and including the words "Ute Indians," in line 3, on the next page.

Mr. LODGE. It compels the Secretary of the Treasury to pay this money, and no appropriation is made from which to pay it.

Mr. PATTERSON. He is to pay it out of the proceeds of the judgment that the Court of Claims is expected to render.

Mr. LODGE. That is not covered by the amendment, if I rightly understand the Senator. The clause would read as he has it now:

By the Secretary of the Treasury, said compensation to be distributed by said attorney to the said attorneys.

Mr. PATTERSON. I call the attention of the Senator from Massachusetts to the language immediately preceding the word "Treasury."

Mr. LODGE. It says:

And shall be paid to him from the proceeds of said judgment by the Secretary of the Treasury.

I see. It was my mistake.

Mr. PATTERSON. So it can only be paid out of the money that is in the Treasury the property of the Ute Indians. Surely, so far as counsel fees are concerned, a fairer provision was never contained in a bill, if an attorney is to be paid for services of this character, and it has always been conceded that attorneys representing Indian tribes in litigation arising under treaties are entitled to some payment.

The reservation that is the subject of this amendment was created in the State of Colorado under an act of 1868, and it embraced a very considerable portion of the western part of the then Territory of Colorado. In 1873 a supplemental treaty was entered into between the United States and these Confederated bands of Indians, by which they surrendered to the Government of the United States a considerable area of that reservation. It was a portion of the reservation that was found to be very rich in gold and silver and in other metals, and before the treaty was entered into a very large number of prospectors and miners had entered the reservation and developed the richness of the property.

By reason of that, under the treaty of 1873 all of these rich mineral grounds were surrendered to the United States, in consideration of which the Government was to pay the Confederated Utes an annuity of $25,000 per annum. That remained the condition until 1880, when another treaty was entered into, under the terms of which practically the entire area of the reservation in Colorado was released to the United States, and the confederated bands of Indians were distributed upon three separate and distinct reservations, all except a small part of the original reservation being in the State of Utah. Under the terms of the treaty of 1880 the Government of the United States agreed to pay to the Confederated Bands of Ute Indians the proceeds of all the lands contained in the reservation that the Government would sell, it being expressly provided that no sale should be made except under cash entries, so that every acre of land within the reservation that had belonged to the Indians and that was sold by the Government would bring a cash price, and the proceeds from the lands so sold were to go to the Indians.

Under the terms of the treaty of 1880 the Government would have certain set-offs against the proceeds of the sale of these Since 1880 the Government has been selling lands within this reservation, and not one dollar of the proceeds has ever been paid to the Indians. There is now accumulated in the Treasury something in the neighborhood of $1,800,000—nearly $1,900,000. The Government can not pay that sum to the Indians until there has been an accounting, in which the Government will be allowed the benefit of the set-offs it has against the Indians under the terms of the treaty of 1880.

In addition to the sales of these lands, amounting to nearly $2,000,000, the Government by various proclamations has set apart as forest reserves three separate tracts of land that contain in the neighborhood of 2,000,000 acres. These can not be sold under the terms of the treaty. Possession of them has been taken by the United States. By the act of Congress and under the proclamation of the President they have been alienated, taken out of the lands that belonged to the Indians, and that were to be sold under cash entries.

All of these matters, Mr. President, remain unsettled. For nearly twenty-six years the confederated bands of Ute Indians have been entitled to an accounting and have been entitled to receive, under the express language of the treaty, a large sum of money possessed by the Government and the value of lands that the Government has taken possession of and eliminated from the lands that might be sold under cash entries.

Mr. President, the Senate upon several occasions has recognized this fact and the duty that the Government owes to the confederated bands of Indians to take some step to pay to them what belongs to them under the treaty and the act of Congress. In 1902 a bill was reported to the Senate which provided for the Court of Claims taking cognizance of these matters and making findings and rendering a judgment. But that bill did not pass. In the hurry of the session it was buried past redemption with many other bills reported from committees.

But again, in 1903 or in 1904, my colleague [Mr. Teller] introduced a bill to refer these matters to the Court of Claims. The bill was reported to the Senate, and, on motion, the matters contained in the bill were referred to the Court of Claims under the Tucker law. Following that reference, the confederated bands of Ute Indians commenced their suit in the Court of Claims, whereupon the Government, through its attorneys, moved to dismiss the proceedings for the want of jurisdiction in the court. The ground of the motion was that the bill which was referred to the Court of Claims did not contain a provision for the payment of a claim by the United States to the Ute Indians. That was the sole ground of the motion. The bill called for an accounting, but did not ask for a judgment, and the Government took advantage of that to prevent an accounting, to prevent so essential and necessary a step from being taken, by raising the question of jurisdiction, urging that be cause no judgment was asked against the Indians the court did not possess jurisdiction to proceed. The filing of that motion necessitated the filing of two additional petitions and other pleadings. But the court overruled the motion tentatively, in its ruling reserving the right to reverse its ruling upon the final submission and argument of the case.

Now, that case, so far as the Court of Claims is concerned, is closed, with this exception, that it stands undetermined on the motion of the Government to dismiss the proceedings because it did not present a claim upon which it asked judgment against the United States, and, in any event, under the reference a judgment can not be rendered.

Mr. President, this amendment is intended to remedy that very grave situation. It is intended, as it does in terms, to confer upon the Court of Claims full, equitable, and legal jurisdiction to take into consideration the claims of the Ute Indians under this particular treaty—the treaty of 1880—and to render judgment.

I do not know, Mr. President, whether this treatment of the Confederated Bands of Ute Indians by the General Government as to the observance of the obligation of treaties is such as is usually meted out to Indian tribes. If it is, I can well understand the state of ill-feeling that exists at the present time and that has existed upon many and many occasions in past years by the Indians toward the General Government.

Three years ago I visited the reservation of the Southern Utes on a semiofficial mission. I was requested by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs to accompany some people who were going to the reservation to negotiate with the Indians to surrender to the United States a part of the reservation upon which were the ruins of the cliff dwellers. I well remember the attitude of the Indians who came to participate in that interview. They simply refused to talk with those who in a semiofficial way represented the Government. They said, "We have made treaty after treaty, and the Government has lived up to no part of those treaties, and until the Government has carried into effect what it has already promised to us we will enter into no arrangement by which the Government will make an additional promise to us."

That was the sum and substance of the negotiations, and those were the answers that were made by the representative Indians who conducted the negotiations as given to us by the interpreter. So we left the reservation without having made a single step forward, simply because the Indians were incensed, were morose, were sullen on account of the fact that the Government had wholly failed in the particulars that are contained in the amendment by the committee as well as other particulars, all of which were obligations resting upon the Government under the solemn terms of a treaty with these Indians.

Mr. President, I submit that this amendment is not objectionable under a point of order. It is a private claim. It is the claim of these Ute Indians, as set forth in the amendment, arising under an express treaty and under an act of Congress, both of which are set forth in the amendment.

I can not understand the logic of the proposition that because under a strained construction legislation may be denominated "general legislation," when that particular kind of legislation is in terms provided for in an additional rule the rule that provides for that legislation in terms shall not have effect.

The mere fact that this is a band of Indians makes it no less a private claim than if it was one Indian. If it was a bill for the relief of ten separate and independent Indians it would nevertheless be a private bill. Here is an entity with which the Government is dealing, and that entity is the Confederated bands of Ute Indians. With that entity the Government entered into negotiations by which it acquired certain very, very valuable rights in the shape of lands from those Indians upon the pledge of the Government that the Government would compensate the Indians, and specifically setting forth the manner and the character of that compensation.

Then, Mr. President, it making no difference whether it is a bill for the relief of one individual or a thousand, since these individuals comprise a single entity as an organization, it is as clearly a private bill as though it was a corporation comprised of officials of hundreds, or it might be thousands, of stockholders. By reason of the organization and the relation of the stockholders to the organization it would be but one person, and it would be a private person, and any bill for the relief of that person would be a private bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Colorado will suspend. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated by the Secretary.

The Secretary. Table Calendar No. 26, Senate resolution No. 214, by Mr. Carter.

Mr. CLAPP. I ask unanimous consent that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered. The Senator from Colorado will proceed.

Mr. PATTERSON. Mr. President, I can only urge that this is a matter of very considerable importance. Only last year we had troubles with the Utes. The Ute Indians are a perpetual menace to the progress of the section of the country in which they are located, and also a menace to the lives and the property of the settlers. Hardly a year passes but that the settlers are not called out for the purpose of protecting their property from Indian raids. Sometimes the militia has been called out. The State of Colorado has had imposed upon it a burden in the shape of hundreds of thousands of dollars of debt to meet the Utes when they are out on their raids. One of the principal causes of the disturbances and the bad conduct on the part of these Indians is their intense dissatisfaction with the manner in which they have been treated by the Government in dealing with their treaty rights.

My colleague, as I said before, has taken a very deep interest in all of the negotiations relating to the Confederated bands of Ute Indians. He was in the Senate when the first treaty after the treaty of 1868—the treaty of 1880—was negotiated. He was one of the principal factors and movers in securing the negotiations that cleared the State of Colorado of the impediments that the Indians presented to the progress and the prosperity of the State. His interest still continues. He particularly feels that treaty obligations that he was largely responsible for imposing upon the Government, that relate to the limits of the State he in part represents upon this floor, have had in the past and will in the future have much to do with the peaceful or the warlike attitude of the Utes toward the whites of the State. He feels a very deep and abiding interest in it, and I have had many a message from his sick bed to do whatever was in my power to have the Senate adopt the

I therefore, having attempted in my weak way to set forth the merits of the claim, do insist, and insist most earnestly, that under the fourth paragraph of the sixteeenth rule this is an amendment expressly provided for in the rules, and the mere fact that under some other rule it might be objectionable does not deprive it of its right under the fourth paragraph of the sixteenth rule; and under that rule I ask that the points of order may be overruled.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, there is no one in the Senate whom I should be more anxious to oblige than the senior Senator from Colorado [Mr. Teller]. As I have already said, there is no pleasure in making points of order, as I have done and as many other Senators have done, against claims appearing in

But these questions are not properly to be decided by personal feelings or by personal desire to oblige a friend. The objections are not made for any reason, so far as I am concerned or any of the other Senators who have made the points of order, except to keep the appropriation bills clear of legislation which ought not to be passed or sent to the President in that form.

I am not going to argue, Mr. President, the merits of this amendment. If it should be ruled in order, I shall be compelled to do so, much as I desire to avoid consuming the time of the Senate, for it is a claim which, on the statement of the Commissioner, will carry in the award from $9,000,000 to $25,000,000. It involves the lands of the Uncompangre band of Utes, which I remember well in President Harrison's time were the subject of a bill for their opening, and the bill was vetoed by President Harrison because it was found that under those lands there were great deposits of gilsonite and of asphalt, and that they were of immense value. Therefore the discussion of this amendment on its merits will open up a very large and a very important question.

Mr. PATTERSON. May I interrupt the Senator?
The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. LODGE. I do.

Mr. PATTERSON. The beds of gilsonite to which the Senator from Massachusetts refers are in Utah and are not in the lands that are in controversy here.

Mr. LODGE. They are not in the lands of the Uncompangre

Mr. PATTERSON. They are in the lands of the Uncompahgre Utes, and the Uncompangre Utes are occupying their reser-The Uncompangre Utes are in Utah. The lands that vation. are in controversy here were released in 1880, to be sold under the very terms of the treaty, and the Government has been engaged in disposing of the lands as fast as it could, or as fast as there was any demand for the lands, under such laws as require cash entries.

Mr. LODGE. As I was saying, I do not care to argue the case on the merits. I have not looked at President Harrison's veto message for many years. This amendment is very general in its provisions. I remember well that the lands of the Uncompaligre Utes turned out to be of enormous value and led to a Presidential veto.

I do not think, Mr. President, that this amendment presents at all the difficulties of the amendment in regard to which the Chair has just rendered a ruling, that which has been sustained by the Senate. The amendment is not to pay a claim directly. It is an amendment to confer certain powers upon the court, or, rather, to instruct the court what to do. It is undoubtedly a measure intended to provide for a private claim, not to carry out the stipulation of a treaty, not to carry out an existing law, for that is the precise point in dispute. It is to facilitate the payment of a private claim and not to carry out stipulations as provided in the rule.

But, Mr. President, it is clearly general legislation. It changes existing law, for under the law this claim has been referred to the Court of Claims by the Senate and is now pending there. It is an amendment to instruct and direct the court what to do in regard to that case.

It does not make a direct charge on the Treasury that is not estimated for, and I will not raise that point; but the effect of the amendment, if it should become a law, would be, as the Commissioner says, to make the award binding on the United States and compel the Government to meet it with an appro-

Therefore, Mr. President, having stated the different aspects briefly, I make the point of order that the amendment is general legislation, changing existing law, by issuing an instruction to the court in a case now pending before it.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President, there is nothing that I could say on this matter which would add anything to the force or weight of what has been said by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. Pat-TERSON]. I do know that it is a matter the senior Senator from Colorado [Mr. Teller] is intensely interested in; that it is a matter that he has been more or less associated with in the past history of it, and in the treaty out of which it has grown.

With due deference, it does seem to me that if subdivision 4 of Rule XVI means anything it means that an amendment, no matter whether it be general or otherwise, is proper on a bill as a private claim if it is to carry out the provisions of an existing law or a treaty stipulation. That is one of the exceptions. If that is not so, subdivision 4 of Rule XVI might as well be stricken out of the rule, because it means nothing, for under the general concept of the general law we could not pass a measure that would not modify in some way the terms of some existing law.

If subdivision 4 means just what it says and permits a private claim to be placed on the bill if it is to carry out a treaty or an existing law, it is permissible without reference to the objection of its being general legislation in the sense that the scope of the general-legislation prohibition simply goes to that which modifies existing law; because, as I said before, you could not imagine a case but what some existing law would necessarily be modified, and unless it means that it certainly means nothing.

I do not care to prolong the discussion. I had hoped that while this matter was up the Senator from Colorado [Mr. Teller | would be here. He is more familiar with the matter than any of us, and it is to be regretted that he is not here to present it to the Senate.

Mr. ALDRICH. Mr. President, it has always been understood in the Senate that the prohibition upon general legislation in an appropriation bill was not modified at all by the provisions of clause 4 of Rule XVI; that the prohibition was absolute as to general legislation, and if legislation was general it was not in order.

If I am not mistaken in my recollection-and I am sure I am not-this very amendment has been offered and ruled out in the Senate on several occasions as general legislation. I have great sympathy for the senior Senator from Colorado, and I am sorry he is not here. If he should present this matter to the Senate in a proper way and at a proper time, I have no doubt he would be able to get the Senate's indorsement of the proposition as one that should be adopted; but I think this is neither the time nor the place to consider a proposition of this kind, involving, as the Senator from Massachusetts has said, from $9,000,000 to $25,000,000, without an opportunity to discuss its merits. It is clearly, in my judgment, general legislation.

Mr. PATTERSON. Mr. President, the Senator from Rhode Island is mistaken when he says that there is no doubt this has been ruled out several times on points of order. It has never before been on a general appropriation bill.

Mr. ALDRICH. Perhaps it has not in the precise form in which it now is here, but legislation affecting the disposition of the lands of the Colorado Utes has certainly been offered here from time to time as an amendment to the Indian appropriation bill.

Mr. CLAPP. Making disposition of their property?

Mr. ALDRICH. Making disposition of their property, and such amendments have all been ruled out on points of order.

Mr. CLAPP. I beg the Senator's pardon.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Rhode Island yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. ALDRICH. Certainly.
Mr. CLAPP. I think up to this session this class of legislation has almost universally gone through on the Indian appropriation bill.

Mr. ALDRICH. Mr. President-

Mr. CLAPP. Up to this time we have always placed measures on the bill designed to wind up the affairs of the tribes and dispose of their property, and I doubt very much whether or not such provisions have ever gone out on a point of order.

Mr. ALDRICH. I think legislation affecting this very band of Indians in Colorado and the disposition of their property in Colorado has been from time to time offered by Senators interested in the matter, and it certainly has been ruled out on points of order, if my recollection is not very much at fault.

Mr. CLAPP. I think the Senator is mistaken about that.
Mr. PATTERSON. Well, Mr. President, I can only speak from personal knowledge of the past six years. I will state to the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. Aldrich] that this matter has never been on an appropriation bill during my service in this Chamber.

It is very easy, Mr. President, for a Senator to say that a thing has always been done in a particular way; it is very easy for a Senator to declare that such amendments have always been ruled out. The Senator from Rhode Island could not have been here when the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. Burkett] called attention to a ruling, I think three or four years ago, by the presiding officer, as I understand it by the present President pro tempore of the Senate [Mr. Frye], in which he gave a construction to Rule IV, and held that legislation of this character could not be ruled out—an express ruling called to the attention of the Vice-President this morning by the Senator from Nebraska. And, Mr. President, all rulings are applied to particular and specific amendments and to particular specific items; and the right of an item upon an appropriation bill in defiance of an alleged rule of the Senate is to be determined by the language of the amendment itself.

I want to correct the statement made by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. Lodge], who says that this amendment is to give directions to the Court of Claims. No, Mr. President, it is to submit a claim, to give to the Court of Claims equitable and legal jurisdiction over this private claim of the Ute In-dians, and to determine what the Ute Indians shall receive by reason of this claim after investigation by the Court of Claims. It does not undertake to direct how the Court of Claims shall determine the legality or the illegality of these claims, or how it shall determine the amount of the claims. It sets forth the fact that there are claims and states the facts with reference to the claims, that these claims arise under an act of Congress and under a treaty with these Confederated bands of Ute Indians. The language of the amendment, Mr. President, shows conclusively that all the Court of Claims can take into consideration is the right of these Indians under the treaty that is expressly mentioned in the amendment, for it reads:

And for all sums due to the Confederated bands of Ute Indians, the complainants in said cause of action, under the terms of the act of Congress approved June 15, 1880, being "An act to accept and ratify the agreement submitted by the Confederated bands of Ute Indians in Colorado for the sale of their reservation in said State, and for other purposes, and to make the necessary appropriations for carrying out the same."

There, Mr. President, the only direction that is given by Congress to the Court of Claims is to find out what is due to the Indians under the express terms of the act of Congress and the treaty with the Indians-that and nothing more. outside of the act of Congress, not to go outside of the treaty stipulation, but in the exercise of their legal and equitable powers to find out what is due to those Indians under the treaty and act of Congress expressly referred to in the amendment.

So, Mr. President, unless it shall be held because a private claim can be denominated general legislation that therefore paragraph 4 of Rule XVI has no force or effect in the body and over the body for the government of which the rule was enacted, then we have a right to have this amendment submitted to the Senate.

Mr. President, when a claim is presented to the Congress of the United States the Congress has a right to do with that claim as it sees fit. Congress might order an accounting before a committee or it might appoint a committee for the purpose of determining and investigating how much is due under the stat-ute, or how much is due under the treaty, for the purpose of de-termining what the amount of appropriation shall be by Congress; and if it would have the right to do that it would have the right to refer all such claims to the Court of Claims, a judicial body created expressly for the purpose of receiving and adjudicating matters of this kind.

So here is a claim presented to the Congress of the United States that has been accumulating now for more than twenty-six years. The proponents of the claim, the Confederated bands of Ute Indians, insist that a large sum of money is due to them by reason of a treaty agreement and the statute of the United States; and Congress is asked to refer that claim to the Court of Claims, a judicial body of its own creation, for the purpose of hearing the claim, passing upon it, and determining under the well-settled rules of law and equity, first, whether a claim exists, and, second, what the amount of the claim should be.

I submit, Mr. President, that if there ever was a case that came within the clear provision of paragraph 4 of Rule XVI of the Senate this is brought distinctly and clearly within it by the language used by the committee in reporting it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair regrets not to have had the benefit of the presence and views of the senior Senator from Colorado [Mr. Teller] with respect to the amendment in which he is interested, but the Chair feels that his interest has not suffered in the very comprehensive and forceful presentation made by his distinguished colleague [Mr. Patterson].

The Chair is of the opinion that the provision of the amendment under consideration with respect to conferring upon the Court of Claims jurisdiction as to a subject-matter now not within its jurisdiction under the law, and the provision with reference to the procedure under such newly conferred jurisdiction, clearly fall within the general description of "general legislation," which is prohibited by the rule. Therefore the Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President, on January 27, 1906, a certain application was pending before the Department of the Interior for the removal of restrictions. On the 19th of January the Department advised the party that the matter was pending. On the 27th the Department wrote a letter to the party stating that the other information was erroneous and that the application had been granted. On the strength of that the party made a sale of the property. I presume the amendment to correct that is subject to a point of order, but I will simply offer it with the accompanying letters

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Minnesota proposes an amendment, which will be stated.

The Secretary. On page 34, after line 11, it is proposed to insert:

The removal of restrictions upon the allotment of Edmund McCurtain, to wit:

"Roll No. 6598, Certificates Nos. 5371 and 3766, Certificate No. 5371, northeast quarter of southeast quarter of section 17, town 6 north, range 7 west, 40 acres. Certificate 3766, south half of northwest quarter of southwest quarter of section 14, town 5 north, range 7 west, 20 acres, and southwest quarter of southwest quarter of section 14, town 5 north, range G west, 40 acres."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. LONG. Where is this land located, I will ask the Sen-

Mr. CLAPP. I know nothing of it, except the matter was presented to me with a communication from the Department. I simply make a formal presentation of it.

What is the communication from the Depart-Mr. LONG. ment?

Mr. CLAPP. The letter will be read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read, in the absence of objection.

The Secretary read as follows:

Mr. EDWARD McCurtain, Box 31, Howe, Ind. T.

Box 31, Hove, Ind. T.

Sir: In the matter of your application for the removal of restrictions upon the alienation of your allotment, exclusive of homestead, you are informed that on December 11, 1905, said application was returned to the Commissioner of Indian Affairs without approval.

You are further advised that any sale of your surplus land which you may have attempted to make, believing that the restrictions had been removed from your land, is of no effect.

Under a late decision of Hon. Hosea Townsend, judge of the southern district of Indian Territory, it appears that title can not pass from the allottee until the delivery to him of his patent.

Respectfully.

Respectfully,

First Assistant Secretary.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I do not believe in the removal of restrictions by special legislation in individual cases. The amendments in the Indian appropriation bill of last year, which were referred to in the debate yesterday, show that removal by act of Congress in special cases without investigation is not for the best interest of the Indian. I have advised those who have presented petitions to me asking for the removal of restrictions in special cases that it was against the policy of the committee to recommend such legislation.

This bill as reported contained an amendment which had for its purpose the return to the supplemental agreements made with the Five Civilized Tribes of Indians. It modified slightly those agreements as to the time when the restrictions should be removed, but generally it would restore the situation as it was before the McCumber amendment was enacted. The effort in this bill to repeal the McCumber amendment has failed because a point of order was made against it, and the Senate could not vote directly on the question, but decided the amendment not in order by a vote of 31 to 22. I believe it was not in order, because it was general legislation, although in my great desire to secure legislation at this session of Congress on this subject I voted that it was in order.

I was a member of the select committee which visited the Indian Territory last fall and spent three weeks there. The Senator from Wyoming [Mr. CLARK] was chairman of the committee. The Senator from Colorado [Mr. Teller], the Senator from Montana [Mr. Clark], and the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. Brandegee] were also members of the committee. After a full investigation of affairs in the Indian Territory the report of that committee was unanimous. We all favored the repeal of the McCumber amendment of last year. The action of the Senate yesterday leaves the McCumber amendment stand as it was enacted. It is probable that the result of this action on this bill will be that no legislation on this subject will be enacted at this session of Congress.

We have incorporated in the pending bill a provision sending to the Court of Claims the question of the validity of that I hope that under that amendment the court will go into all the questions wherein that amendment sought to modify the supplemental agreements and that, on appeal to the Supreme Court, we may have an early decision which will settle conditions in the Indian Territory. As I said the other day in the discussion of that amendment, at the expiration of the periods designated in the supplemental agreements lands in the Indian Territory will be sold, notwithstanding that amendment.

The McCumber amendment has not been defended in this Chamber. No Senator has said that he believed it was constitutional or within the power of Congress to enact. Its author stated that he had doubts upon the proposition, but was willing to leave it to the courts to determine whether it was valid. believe it is invalid. Its constitutionality has not been defended by any Senator when it was attacked by Senators who opposed it.

But whatever may be the opinion here in regard to it, in Indian Territory, where the question has been given very careful consideration, the unanimous opinion of the best lawyers is that it is invalid and that it is a cloud upon the titles of the lands of the Five Civilized Tribes. If there is no legislation at this session of Congress and the subject goes over until the next Congress, sales will be made of those lands in the meantime, notwithstanding that amendment, but those sales will not be made to home seekers, to those who want to acquire those lands for homes for themselves and their families.

There are two classes of people in Indian Territory who will be specially benefited by the failure to have any legislation enacted at this session of Congress. First, the lawyers in the Indian Territory, and second, the speculators—those who are engaged in the business of purchasing lands with defective titles and taking their chances later in the courts of having their titles declared good. Those two classes will be helped by the failure to repeal the McCumber amendment. The people who desire to go to the Indian Territory-the home seekers and the home builders—and who wish to acquire these lands at their fair value will not go there and will not purchase them when it possibly means a lawsuit in every instance. Indians who own the lands, who are land-poor because they have more land than they can farm or improve, should be permitted to dispose of their surplus lands. They will dispose of them next summer at the best price they can get, but those prices will be much below the real value because the titles are clouded by the McCumber amendment.

It is to be regretted that in the absence of legislation, because of our failure to repeal this amendment, which is confessedly invalid, we will injure the Indians whom we are endeavoring to protect and assist.

Beginning probably at the next session, the State of Oklahoma will have its Senators on this floor and will have five Representatives in the House. It will be a great State. Its Senators and Representatives will do their part in the legislation of the country. They will also demand much-needed legislation for the new State. They will early demand this legislation.

They will insist upon it as one of the rights of the people of that State, and they will obtain it, for their demand will be just.

Much of the land in Indian Territory is nontaxable. houses are to be built, roads are to be made, county governments are to be organized; but how are the taxes to be levied with the lands exempt from taxation?

I regret that affairs should be left in this situation. I was in favor of the proposed legislation submitted by the select committee to the Committee on Indian Affairs and reported by that committee to the Senate, but declared not in order, because it was general legislation on an appropriation bill. There will probably be no opportunity aside from the pending bill to enact such legislation.

I believe that proposed legislation, returning as it did to the supplemental agreements made with the Indians, was wise. It was the thing that should have been done.

I do not believe in Congress removing restrictions in individual cases. I do not believe that the case covered by the amendment of the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. Clapp] should be favored above others which have been rejected. The policy of the committee was not to report individual cases, and it should be adhered to. I make the point of order against the amendment that it is general legislation.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, the time has gone by to argue a case which was decided yesterday. I only want to say that a year ago the same subject was under consideration by the Senate, and the same questions were raised as to the constitutionality of the McCumber amendment. It was admitted that it was questionable, but the Senate decided, notwithstanding the fact that there might be a question as to its constitutionality, our duty toward the Indian demanded of us that we take that step in order to protect him from the white people of the Indian Territory. The matter came up again and was debated the day before yesterday and debated again yesterday, and the Senate, after full consideration of both sides of the question, decided again that its policy should be to protect the Indian until the court should say that we were powerless to protect him

I think, Mr. President, that, without any possible question, the legislation has been for the benefit of the Indians. If it is true, Mr. President, that the amendment which was adopted a year ago has been a cloud upon the title of the Indian's property

Mr. LONG. Mr. President—
Mr. McCUMBER. Just one second and I will yield to the Senator—and that by reason of that it has enabled the grafters to purchase that property cheaper than they otherwise could have done and that the Indian has received less for it, I want to lay that case side by side with the cases which were presented by the Senator's colleague from Kansas [Mr. Curtis], in which property that was yielding a revenue of $40,000 a year was sold for the sum of $3,500, where there was no cloud upon the title whatever. If it be true, Mr. President, that removing a cloud will produce such results as has been shown before the Senate, then I insist that the more clouds we can place upon the Indian's title the better for the Indian.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President-

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Kansas?

Will the Senator pardon me a moment? Mr. CLAPP.

Mr. McCUMBER. I will yield to either Senator.
Mr. CLAPP. Will the Senator yield just a moment?
Mr. McCUMBER. This is all I have got to say about the

Mr. LONG. I wished to call the attention of the Senator from North Dakota to the fact that the Senate decided yesterday that the amendment reported was general legislation on an appropriation bill and was not in order. That is the question the Senate decided. It did not pass upon the merits of the proposition.

Mr. McCUMBER. In most cases, Mr. President, the Senator understands that we vote on questions of that kind on the merits. I do, and I believe every Senator votes upon the merits of the question. I believe the sentiment of the Senate, as was expressed on that occasion, was that we should continue that protection over the Indians.

Mr. LONG. The vote was taken on the question as to whether the amendment was in order, and the Senate decided it was not in order. The main question has not yet been dethe was not in order. The main question has not yet been determined by the Senate.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair sustains the point of order made by the Senator from Kansas [Mr. Long] against the amendment offered by the Senator from Minnesota [Mr.

CLAPP].
Mr. McCUMBER. I wish now to ask what became of the amendment on page 110, commencing in line 17? That is the amendment, I think, to which the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. Lodge] made a point of order, and I asked him to withhold it

Mr. CLAPP. Yesterday afternoon the objection was pressed, and it went out on the point of order.

Mr. McCUMBER. That disposes of it, then.

Mr. CLAPP. Yes.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I offer the amendment I send to the

The Secretary. On page 10, line 13, after the word "dollars," it is proposed to insert:

And the powers conferred by section 2140 of the Revised Statutes upon Indian agents, subagents, and commanding officers of military posts are hereby conferred upon the special agent of the Indian Bureau for the suppression of the liquor traffic among Indians and in the Indian country and duly authorized deputies working under his supervision.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CARTER. I submit the amendment I send to the desk. The Secretary. On page 69, after line 11, it is proposed to

That the Indians of the Fort Belknap Reservation in Montana may lease their lands, both allotted and tribal, not to exceed 20,000 acres, for the culture of sugar beets and other crops in rotation, upon such terms, regulations, and conditions as shall be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior, for a term of ten years.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I offer the amendment which I send to

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Will the Senator from North Dakota please indicate at what point he wishes the amendment to be inserted?

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I suppose it should come in at the end of the bill, under the heading "Miscellaneous."

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to insert at the end of the bill the following:

That the heirs of the late Mathias Splitlog, deceased, an Indian allottee of the Seneca Nation, Ind. T., are authorized to sell and convey to the Roman Catholic Church, for church and burial purposes, 3 acres of the land heretofore allotted to the said Mathias Splitlog as a member of the Seneca tribe of Indians in the Indian Territory, to be selected so as to include the church and cemetery now on said allotment. The minor heirs may join in the sale of said 3 acres of land by a guardian duly appointed by the United States court for the northern district of the Indian Territory.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

STATE PUBLIC SCHOOL SYSTEMS.

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, I call up Senate resolution No. 183.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate, at the request of the Senator from Tennessee, the resolution indicated by him, which will be read.

The resolution submitted by Mr. RAYNER December 4, 1906, was read, as follows:

Was read, as follows:

Resolved, That in the opinion of the Senate this Government has no right to enter into any treaty with any foreign government relating in any manner to any of the public school systems of any of the States of the Union: And resolved further, That in the opinion of the Senate there is no provision in the treaty between the United States and the Government of Japan that relates in any manner to this subject or in any way interferes with the right of the State of California to conduct and administer its system of public schools in accordance with its own legislation: And resolved further, That it is the duty of the President of the United States to notify the Government of Japan and notify any foreign government with whom the question may arise that the public educational institutions of the States are not within the jurisdiction of the United States and that the United States has no power to regulate or supervise their administration.

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, I would not have presumed to

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, I would not have presumed to detain the Senate with any observations upon the pending resolution, after the clear, convincing, and exhaustive argument of its author, the Senator from Maryland, but for the grave and far-reaching questions which underlie the issues raised by this resolution.

If California can, by treaty made by the Federal Government, be deprived of the right to administer and control its public school system, and by lawful and proper regulations separate the different races who may be permitted to attend them, then, in like manner, may Tennessee or any other State have taken from it the right to manage and control its domestic school system, and by Federal interference be denied the right, by proper regulation, to separate the different races who may be permitted to attend its schools. With the present Chief Executive seeking with almost petulant impatience to force from a State one of its plainest and most sacred rights, the right of local selfgovernment, the right to administer its own local schoolsa question pending which, if decided adversely to California, may some day be given an interpretation which will affect disastrously the rights and interests of my own State, I can not with justice to the people whom I in part have the honor to represent upon this floor sit indifferent or fail to utter my respectful but earnest protest.

Mr. President, nations, like men, should stand by and faithfully observe their obligations. This is not only true because it is just and right to so act, but because it is demanded by the highest considerations of public policy. The peace of the world, the honor of humankind, the welfare and happiness of future generations, all demand that we as a nation and a people should sacredly observe our treaty obligations. Thus believing, no one can hold a convention of this Government lawfully entered into in greater respect than I do. I would have this Republic guard its treaty obligations with scrupulous care and adhere to them with undeviating fidelity. Great and strong as this nation is, and potential as it should be on the side of peace and justice among the nations of the world, its example should be one of frank and manly fidelity to every convention into which it enters. Therefore in what I shall say in respect to the treaty with Japan and the controversy which has arisen under it I would not be understood as desiring this Government to repudiate any just obligation which it has lawfully assumed: but I do claim that the American people who are to be affected directly and indirectly by this treaty have a right to demand that their servants, temporarily charged with treaty-making and treaty-enforcing power under the Constitution, shall not hastily concede or surrender any of their rights under the treaty or assume to enforce submission to a treaty made in violation of the constitutional rights of a sovereign State.

Mr. President, I yield to no one in my admiration for the wonderful progress and achievements of the Japanese as a people and a nation. Their rise in a comparatively brief period from a condition of semidarkness and weakness to that of a marvelously progressive and enlightened nation is one of the wonders of the century. They have fairly won their place among the leading nations of the world. Their courage and skill in war on both land and sea in their recent struggle with Russia elicited the admiration and unreserved encomiums of the civilized world. And not more, Mr. President, on account of their soldierly qualities of courage and endurance than of the civilized and humane character of the struggle which they waged. In that contest my sympathies were entirely with Japan. I am, therefore, moved by no feelings of prejudice toward the Japanese in speaking as I shall touching this contrc-

There is nothing in this issue, however it may be determined, to disturb the ancient friendship between ours and the Japanese people, or to furnish just cause for complaint on the part of Japan. If this Government, either through its courts or otherwise, should decide against the Japanese contention in toto, it would furnish no "casus belli."

Mr. President, what is this much-talked-of question about which the President has grown excited and belligerent toward a portion of our fellow-citizens and with which the daily press is filled? We are informed that there have been secret and mysterious conferences between the President and the California delegation in Congress, and we are told that the mayor and board of school trustees of San Francisco have been asked by the President to travel across the continent and come here, doubtless that he may persuade them to surrender, so far as they can, the State's sovereign right to control its domestic schools, that this Administration and the country may be thus relieved from the embarrassment in which they have been involved by what I believe to be an erroneous and untenable posi-tion assumed by the President. Briefly stated, the question is this: The school board of San Francisco, in pursuance of a statute of California authorizing such action, provided that Japanese citizens residents of that city should not attend schools provided for white children, but might attend equally good but separate schools, provided at the public expense, for children of the Mongolian race. This would seem to be a purely local matter involving the management and control of one of the State's domestic concerns and over which the State of California and its municipality would seem to have exclusive jurisdiction. In the absence of and independent of the question raised by this treaty no one, I think, would question the constitutional right of California to pass such a law, or of the school board of San Francisco to make such an order. No one would contend, I apprehend, that Congress could pass a valid law affecting the control or administration of the schools of California.

The right of a State by statute to provide for separate schools for different races within its borders has been repeatedly declared and maintained, not only by the highest courts of many of the States, but by the Supreme Court of the United States. So that it is clear that, so far as the constitution and laws of California are concerned, the school board of San Francisco was within constitutional and statutory authority when it provided separate schools for the white and Japanese students residing in that city. (People v. Gallager, 93 N. Y., 438; Roberts v. City of Boston, 5 Cush., 198.)

Now, Mr. President, let us see whether the United States in fact ever contracted in any treaty with Japan that Japanese residing in this country should have the right of admission to the public schools of any State along with the white children of such State. I contend that the United States has entered into no such contract and that the existing treaty between Japan and the United States contains no such provision. By no fair and reasonable or usual rule of interpretation can any such contract or guaranty be read into the treaty. The provisions of the treaty between the United States and Japan, which went ino effect March 21, 1895, and under which it is claimed these rights arise, are to be found in Article I, which is as follows:

ARTICLE I. In whatever relates to rights of residence and travel, to the possession of goods and effects of any kind, to the succession to personal estate, by will or otherwise, and the disposal of property of any sort and in any manner whatsoever which they may lawfully acquire, the citizens or subjects of each contracting party shall enjoy in the territories of the other the same privileges, liberties, and rights, and shall be subject to no higher imposts or charges in these respects than native citizens or subjects or citizens or subjects of the most-favored nation. The citizens or subjects of each of the contracting parties shall enjoy in the territories of the other the entire liberty of conscience, and, subject to the laws, ordinances, and regulations, shall enjoy the right of public exercise of their worship, and also the right of burying their respective countrymen, according to their religious customs, in such suitable and convenient places as may be established and maintained for that purpose.

I challenge anyone to find in this treaty a word, line, or sentence guaranteeing to the Japanese residents in this country the right to enter the public schools of the States at all, much less the right to enter them in defiance of the regulations of the local authorities under whose control they are.

The treaty is absolutely silent on the subject of public education and the alleged right of Japanese residents to participate in the advantages of the local educational systems of the States. Unlike the Burlingame treaty with China, the Japanese treaty does not even refer to or give the Japanese residents any specific rights to enter schools or institutions "in control of the United States," as did the Chinese treaty. There is a marked difference between the treaty under consideration and the Chinese treaty to which I have referred. The provisions as to schools in the former was omitted from the latter. Objection to such separation by the Chinese under the Burlingame treaty would not have been well founded, because the schools to which Chinese residents, by the terms of that treaty, were to enjoy the privilege of attending were schools "under the control of the Government of the United States," and it " under could not be contended that the schools of California or of the city of San Francisco were schools under the control of the United States Government.

Neither the State of California nor any other State is under any obligations to the United States, or the nations with which it has treaty relations, to create or maintain public schools at all. The schools are voluntarily instituted by the States, primarily for the free education of the children of the citizens of those States. They are maintained and supported by local taxation, and are wholly and absolutely under the control of the The Government of the United States has no right or power to force California or any other State to institute and maintain any such schools, nor has it any constitutional right or authority to interfere with their management, dictate the manner in which they shall be conducted, or prescribe rules of gov-ernment for the admission of students. California undeniably has the right and power to institute any kind or character of school the judgment of the legislature may determine to be for the best interest of the State. It can maintain only industrial schools, or only primary schools, or only high schools, or no It can make any rule or regulation for their government the legislative judgment may approve.

But it is contended that that portion of the Japanese treaty which guarantees to Japanese citizens the right of residence and travel in this country give such Japanese the right to enter the free public schools of a State in association with white children, contrary to the rules and regulations of the local authorities as to the segregation of the races. meant, Mr. President, by right of residence? What are the rights and privileges which necessarily and properly go with it or flow from it and are implied by the term "residence?" The privilege of residence, I think, fairly implies the right of peaceful residence; the right to maintain a home or dwelling place and to be undisturbed in its enjoyment. It may, and doubtless does, imply the right to work and make a living, for a right of residence would be worthless without the right to acquire the means of livelihood. But by what kind of rule of construction can the right of residence be held to embrace the right of education at the public expense—the right to enter the public schools at all? There is no natural right which even any citizen of the United States, or of any State, has to be educated or have his children educated at public expense. It is a privilege to be conferred by law. No such right arises from the right of residence, or even of citizenship, unless expressly conferred by law. And certainly none would accrue to an alien merely as an incident of his right to reside in this country.

But it is said that the favored-nation clause gives some such right as is contended for.

What is this most favored nation clause? It is that as to the subjects and rights granted by this treaty or any other treaty on the same subjects, to wit, the right of residence, travel, trade, etc., the Japanese shall have all the rights granted to the citizens or subjects of the most-favored nation.

If the United States has made a treaty with any other nation in which it has guaranteed its citizens the right to enter the public schools of the States with the citizens of such State, waiving for the time the question of the right of the United States to legally make such treaty, then under the favored-nation clause the Japanese might insist on such rights, but the mere fact that in the absence of such treaty stipulations a State permits or allows the citizens of another country to enter its local schools would not give the Japanese any such right, for it is a mere license granted by a State and not a right stipulated for in this treaty or any other treaty.

But there is another provision of this treaty to which I desire to invite attention. It is found in section 2, and is as follows:

ART. II. Conforming themselves to the laws, police and custom regulations of the country like native citizens or subjects.

It is, however, understood that the stipulations contained in this and the preceding article do not in any way affect the laws, ordinances, and regulations with regard to trade, the immigration of laborers, police, and public security which are in force or which may hereafter be enacted in either of the two countries.

Now, Mr. President, that is an express provision that in respect to the rights guaranteed in the preceding article, which relate to the right of residence, etc., the Japanese must conform to the laws, police, and regulations of the country like native citizens. Suppose the right of residence carries with it the right to enter the public schools of the States as contended; then that right must be exercised in conformity with the laws, police, and regulations of the country. What are the laws, police, and regulations of the country here referred to? Un-What are the laws, doubtedly the laws and police regulations of the States as well as the nation. For the treaty-making power is presumed to understand and is charged with a knowledge of the nature and character of our dual form of Government. The Supreme Court of the United States, in Norris v. City of Boston (7 Howard, 472), in speaking of a provision of a treaty very similar to this one, said:

The permission there mutually given to reside and hire houses and warehouses and to trade and traffic is in express terms made subject to the laws of the two countries respectively. Now, the privileges here given within the several States are all regulated by State laws, and the reference to the laws of this country necessarily applies to them, and subjects the foreigner to their decision and control.

We have seen that such State laws may provide for the separation of the races in the schools, and that residents and citizens must accept the privileges of such schools, subject to the statutory regulations for their government. If a Mongolian is a citizen of California he is subject to the laws separating the races, and such law is valid as to such Mongolian citizen. That has been expressly decided in 119 Federal Reporter and by the supreme court of California. In the former case the court thus expressed itself:

The validity of the statute referred to does not depend upon the motive which may in fact have actuated the members of the legislature in voting for its enactment. Upon such an inquisy the courts have no right to enter. If the law does not conflict with some constitutional limitation of the powers of the State legislature, it can not be declared invalid. Concerning the authority of the State over matters pertaining to public schools within its limits, and the validity of legislation of the character of that under consideration, it is well-settled that the State has the right to provide separate schools for the children of different races, and such action is not forbidden by the fourteenth amendment to the Constitution.

Then, if it be conceded for the sake of argument that the Japanese under this treaty have acquired all the rights relating to schools that belong to citizens, still they have only acquired the right to enter the public schools subject to the same laws, rules, and regulations as the local authorities have prescribed for the separation of the races who are citizens. It can not be contended that these aliens have acquired greater rights than the citizens. The citizens of California only have the right to enter the public schools, subject to such laws and rules as the State has prescribed, and hence it follows logically and inevitably that the Japanese can only enter subject to the same rules. To assert otherwise would be to contend that the Japanese were not granted the same privileges as citizens, but higher and greater privileges. If the State can make valid laws separating in the schools the white race from the Mongolian so far as their own citizens are concerned, how can it be contended on any theory of construction of this treaty that they can not do so as to Japanese temporarily residing here who are guaranteed by this treaty equal, not greater, rights than citizens?

If I am correct, Mr. President, in the construction which I have placed upon this treaty, then the Japanese Government has no ground on which to stand and the contention must fall. I believe this to be the fact and that the President should have so construed the treaty and so notified the Japanese Government.

First. That under the terms of the treaty the Japanese residents had no right to enter the State public schools at all, except at the pleasure and subject to the laws of the States.

Second. That the United States had no jurisdiction over the public schools of the States.

A frank and manly attitude will do more to preserve our traditional friendship than any amount of palaver and bluster. The President, through his Secretary of State, should have told Japan the truth, just as Mr. Blaine did Italy after the murder of Italian citizens by a mob in New Orleans. It will be recalled that there was then, in effect, a treaty between the United States and Italy which guaranteed protection to Italian subjects in this country. The Italian Government demanded that the United States punish the perpetrators of the murder. They were known to the authorities of both governments, because the mob assembled in broad daylight, and many of the leading citizens of that city had participated in it.

Mr. Blaine, then Secretary of State, pointed out with great clearness and force the dual nature of our Government, and notified the Italian minister that the power to punish for mur-der committed in a State was one of the reserved rights of the States, and that the United States had no legal or constitutional power to either punish the criminals itself or force the State of Louisiana to do so. And that ended that portion of the controversy. And I believe a similar course on the part of the President would have ended this controversy. But whether it would or not, Mr. President, I trust that we have not reached the point in our history where we are ready to apologize to any foreign nation for the Constitution of the United States or to attempt to constructively amend it at the dictation of any such power. The predictions of excitable and unthinking people that war with Japan is probable, or even possible, as a result of this controversy are, in my judgment, hysterical and unfounded. Upon this question Japan has no sufficient ground mon which to stand, and if that nation should make it. upon which to stand; and if that nation should precipitate a conflict upon such a flimsy pretext, it would shock the moral sense of the civilized world.

No, Mr. President, if we are ever to have war with Japan it will owe its origin to another and a totally different cause. It will come as the logical, and I fear, the inevitable, result of the fatal blunder which this nation made when, forgetting and discrediting its own Monroe doctrine relating to the Western Hemisphere, it crossed the Pacific Ocean, went into the Eastern Hemisphere, took the Philippine Islands, and thus thrust itself, without justification or excuse, into the very midst of the dangers and complications of the eastern question.

If war in that quarter comes, it will be because we departed from the precepts of the fathers; forgot the causes which led to our revolutionary struggle; ignored the fundamental principles of our own Government and went to the other side of the world and there established a colonial system more arbi-trary and supreme than that against which our forefathers rebelled. It will be because, in our prosperity and strength, we have swaggered and boasted of being a world power until we have inspired in the nations of the East a fear that, not contented to dominate the politics and commerce of the Western Hemisphere, we have crossed the Pacific with the ultimate purpose to try to dominate the politics and the commerce of the These are plain words, Mr. President, but I believe they are truthful words.

But, Mr. President, suppose the construction for which I contend is wholly wrong. Concede that the construction of the President and his advisers is the correct one, and that the United States has entered into a treaty with guarantees to the residents of that Government in this country the right to enter the public free schools of the several States on the same terms and with the white children of such States, then, Mr. President, we are confronted with a wider, a deeper, and a more far-reaching question-a grave question of constitutional law-one that goes to the very vitals of our Federal system of government, and menaces the local sovereignty and authority of every State in the Union. If the Federal Government can, by treaty, rob a State of its sovereign right and power to manage and control its domestic concerns, like its local school system, then in truth is the last stronghold of State sovereignty broken down and the long-cherished liberty of local self-government destroyed.

Let us state the issue in its simplest form, that all men may see and understand the full purport of its meaning and the tremendous consequences which wait upon its proper determination. A State of this Union asserts its sovereign right to institute, maintain, and control a system of public schools within its borders. It passes a valid law authorizing the separation of Mongolians from whites attending those schools. An order of separation is made in pursuance of such law. The President makes, and the Senate confirms, a treaty with a foreign nation which guarantees to the citizens of that country of the Mongolian race the right to enter such State public schools on the same terms and in association with white children. The treaty says there shall be no separation of the races in the schools; the State statute says there shall be such separation. Is such treaty valid, and shall it prevail over the State law?

I say that the treaty must fall, because it is ultra vires, beyond and outside of the treaty-making power of the United States; that the Federal Government can not make a valid and constitutional treaty which robs a sovereign State of one of its confessedly reserved rights, because such a treaty would be in contravention of the Constitution of the United States, from which the treaty-making power of the Federal Government alone derives its power to make treaties. Mr. President, that the scope and extent of the treaty-making power of the Federal Government may be correctly understood and properly applied, it is necessary to recall briefly the peculiar nature and character of our Government. At the risk of being regarded as entertaining opinions old fashioned and obsolete in these strenuous days of Federal aggression and usurpation of power, I adhere to the opinion that the Federal Government is a Government of limited powers.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Mr. President-

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. Bacon in the chair). Does the Senator from Tennessee yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. FRAZIER. Certainly. Mr. BEVERIDGE. I will not disturb the Senator if it will interrupt him at all, but I was tremendously interested in the clear and frank and broad statement he made a moment ago about the conflict of treaties with the sovereign power of a State. If it would not interrupt the Senator at this juncture, I should like to ask him one or two questions. If it would, I will postpone them until the Senator is through,

Mr. FRAZIER. I should gladly yield to the Senator, and I would not hesitate to be interrupted

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I will ask the questions after the Senator gets through.

Mr. FRAZIER. It would not disturb me in the slightest degree, except that by perhaps a too kindly disposition on my part I have let the better part of the day pass. It is now twenty minutes past 3 o'clock, and I should be very glad to conclude my remarks this afternoon, and if I am able to do so, at the conclusion of my remarks I shall be delighted to attempt to answer any question the Senator from Indiana may propose.

Mr. BEVERIDGE, I understand; and I will not ask my questions now.

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, the power and authority of the Federal Government to make treaties is, in my judgment, a granted power. All authority that the Federal Government possesses to make treaties is the power conferred upon it by the Constitution. I think it will be conceded that after the Declaration of Independence of the colonies, and certainly after their independence was acknowledged by Great Britain, each of the thirteen colonies was a complete sovereignty, possessed of all the attributes and powers incident to such sovereignty, including the power to make treaties. When the colonies won their independence they did not become thereby a nation. If no constitution had been formed and ratified by the States, each of the thirteen States might have gone its way, each independent of the other, and each would have possessed and doubtless exercised absolute and complete power and authority to make and execute treaties with each other and with foreign governments.
When the Federal Constitution was adopted those States surrendered to the Federal Government the power and authority to make treaties, which they had theretofore possessed-power exclusive and ample, and only restrained as to its objects and scope and extent by the terms of their written grant, to wit, the Constitution of the United States; and all of the power which the Federal Government possesses in this respect is the power thus granted to it by those States.

Article VI of the Constitution is as follows:

This Constitution, and the laws of the United States which shall be made in pursuance thereof; and all treaties made, or which shall be made, under the authority of the United States, shall be the supreme law of the land; and the judges in every State shall be bound thereby, anything in the constitution or laws of any State to the contrary notwith-

This article must be construed in connection with the other articles of the Constitution. It can not be said that any just construction would warrant the separation of this article and allow it to stand apart from and tower above and dwarf and annul the other articles of the Constitution. It must be construed in connection with all of the other granted and reserved powers contained in the Constitution. To hold that this article gave to the treaty-making power of the Federal Government unlimited power and authority to make treaties would be to hold that this article might annul other articles and provisions of the Constitution. If this article can annul one other article, of either reserved or prohibited powers, it can annul all such powers. No one would for a moment contend that a valid treaty could be made that would change our form of government and provide for a king instead of an elective President or that would abolish its representative character; and yet why not, if the power to make treaties is unlimited and unrestrained, even by the terms of the Constitution itself?

Article I of the Constitution provides that "Congress shall make no law * * * abridging the freedom of speech, or or the press." Will it be insisted that a treaty could be made which would muzzle or place a censorship upon the American press, that it might thus be restrained from speaking in criticism of the conduct of this or of any government with which such treaty might be made? And yet, why not, if the treatymaking power is absolute and not circumscribed by the limitations of the Constitution?

Under the Constitution Congress has power to legislate concerning naturalization. Could a treaty be made naturalizing aliens otherwise than as provided by law?

Congress has the power to lay taxes on imposts, etc. Could it be contended that a valid treaty of commerce could be made by the President and Senate which would modify or annul our tariff laws?

Section 4 of Article VI of the Constitution provides that the "United States shall guarantee to every State in this Union a republican form of government." Would a treaty which dismembered and ceded away a part or the whole of the acknowledged territory of a State, and placed its people under the sovereignty of a king, be a valid treaty? Such a contention would hardly be insisted upon by even the extremest school of construction.

The Supreme Court of the United States, in speaking of the treaty-making power, in Geoffrey v. Riggs (133 U. S., 267), uses the following significant language:

The treaty-making power as expressed in the Constitution is in terms unlimited, except by those restraints which are found in that instrument against the action of the Government, or of its departments, and those arising from the nature of our Government itself and of that of the States. It would not be contended that it extended so far as to authorize what the Constitution forbids, or a change in the character of the Government, or in that of one of the States, or a cession of any portion of the territory of the latter without its consent

Justice Daniels, in the License cases (5 Howard, 613), in speaking of the constitutional grant relating to treaties, says:

speaking of the constitutional grant relating to treaties, says:

This provision of the Constitution, it is to be feared, is sometimes expounded without those qualifications which the character of the parties to this instrument and its adaptation to the purposes for which it was created necessarily imply. Every power delegated to the Federal Government must be expounded in coincidence with a perfect right of the States to all that they have not delegated; in coincidence, too, with the possession of every power and right necessary for their existence and preservation, for it is impossible to believe that these were ever, either in intention or in fact, ceded to the General Government. Laws of the United States in order to be binding must be within the legitimate powers vested by the Constitution. Treaties in order to be valid must be made within the scope of the same power, for there can be no authority of the United States save what is derived mediately or immediately and regularly and legitimately from the Constitution. A treaty, no more than an ordinary statute, can arbitrarily cede away one right of a State or of any citizen of a State.

Mr. Madison, in the Virginia convention, in answer to the

Mr. Madison, in the Virginia convention, in answer to the criticism of Patrick Henry, that the treaty-making clause of the Constitution was unlimited, said:

Does it follow, because the power is given to Congress, that it is absolute and unlimited? I do not conceive that that power is given to the President and the Senate to dismember the empire or to alienate any great essential right. I do not think the whole legislative authority have this power. The exercise of the power must be consistent with the object of the delegation.

Mr. Jefferson, in his famous Manual, speaking of this provision of the Constitution, said:

By the general power to make treaties the Constitution must have intended to comprehend only those objects which are usually regulated by treaty and can not be otherwise regulated. It must have meant to except out of these the rights reserved to the States, for surely the President and the Senate can not do by treaty what the whole Government is interdicted from doing in any way.

Justice Story, in his Commentaries upon the Constitution of the United States, in speaking of the treaty-making clause,

Savs:

But though the power is thus general and unrestricted, it is not to be so construed as to destroy the fundamental laws of the State. A power given by the Constitution can not be construed to authorize the destruction of other powers given in the same instrument. It must be construed, therefore, in subordination of it, and can not supersede or interfere with any other of its fundamental provisions. Each is equally obligatory and paramount authority within its scope, and no one embraces a right to annihilate any other. A treaty to change the organization of the Government, to overturn its republican form, to deprive it of its constitutional powers, would be void, because it would destroy what it was designed merely to fulfill.

Judge Thomas M. Cooley, one of the ablest and clearest writers upon constitutional law and one of the most distinguished jurists of the nation, said:

The President has power, by and with the consent of the Senate, to make treaties, provided two-thirds of the Senators concur. The Constitution imposes no restriction upon this power, but it is subject to the implied restriction that nothing can be done under it which changes the Constitution of the country or robs a department of the Government or any of the States of its constitutional authority.

Mr. President, I desire to direct the attention of the Senate to one other case in which this principle was expressly decided. It is the case of The People v. Nagle (1 Cal., 232), a case cited with approval by the Supreme Court of the United States. It will be recalled that that case arose over a law of that case uses this language:

State fixing a tax upon aliens for permission to work in the mines. The supreme court of California in disposing of that case uses this language:

But even if the provisions of the statute did clash with the stipulations of the treaty, the conclusion is not deducible that the treaty must therefore stand and the State law give way. The question in such a case would not be solely what is provided for by the treaty, but whether the State retained the power to enact the contested law or had given up that power to the General Government. If the State retains the power, then the President and the Senate can not take it away by treaty. A treaty is supreme only when it is made in pursuance of that authority which has been conferred upon the treaty-making department, and in relation to those subjects, the jurisdiction over which has been exclusively intrusted to Congress. When it transcends these limits, like an act of Congress which transcends the constitutional authority of that body, it can not supersede a State law which enforces or exercises any power of the State not granted away by the Constitution. To hold any other doctrine would sanction the supremacy of a treaty which should entirely exempt foreigners from taxation by the States. It is not within the scope of a constitutional treaty to interfere with the reserved powers of taxation of foreigners by the States.

I concede, Mr. President, that there are some cases decided by the Supreme Court of the United States, like Ware v. Hylton and Chirac v. Chirac, which would seem to warrant the opposite view from that for which I have been contending. But it will not be forgotten, Mr. President, that both of those cases arose under treaties made under the Articles of Confederation and before the adoption of the Constitution. When all these cases are analyzed and differentiated, I do not believe that any can be found that will sustain the extraordinary position that a treaty may violate an article of the Constitution of the United States and still be valid.

Mr. President, the Constitution in all its parts must be construed together, and its provisions thus reconciled, so as to give validity and force and effect to every provision and so as to carry out the purposes of the instrument. It seems to me a monstrous thing to say that the wise men who framed this Government and defined its powers and limitations with so much wisdom and care could have been so foolish, after having built the fabric, as to vest in the treaty-making power, which consists of only the President and the Senate, the absolute and unrestrained power at one fell swoop to knock down and destroy the entire structure. And such is the necessary and inevitable effect which must follow, if the contention that the power of the Federal Government to make treaties is unlimited even by the Constitution prevails. Then, if it be true that the treaty-making power granted to the Federal Government under the Constitution is not unlimited, but is limited and circumscribed in its extent and scope and objects by the terms of the Constitution, does it not follow that Article VI must be construed with and be limited by Article X, which says:

The powers not delegated to the United States by the Constitution, nor prohibited to the States, are reserved to the States respectively, or to the people.

This article is as much a part of the Constitution and has as much force and validity as Article VI, from which the power to make treaties is derived. It can no more be invaded, violated, and annulled by the treaty-making power than can the other articles of the Constitution to which I have alluded.

I concede that a treaty made with relation to a subject concerning which the United State has authority to make a treaty and within the limitations of the Constitution is the supreme law of the land and will prevail against a statute or even the constitution of a State. But a treaty which is beyond and outside of the treaty-making power of the Federal Government, and is in conflict with any of the provisions and limitations of the Constitution, can have no more validity than an act of Congress which thus violates the Constitution. There may be an unconstitutional treaty as well as an unconstitutional enactment. A treaty may be repealed and annulled by an act of (Fong Yue Ting v. United States, 149 U. S., 721.)

This brings us naturally to the consideration of the question as to what are the rights of the States expressly reserved to them by Article X of the Constitution, and is the right to create and conduct a local school system one of the reserved rights of the States? If the right of management and control of the local school systems of the States is one of the reserved rights of the States, then manifestly it can not be ceded away by a treaty any more than it can be taken away by an act of Con-Under our system of government all powers are reserved to the States except such powers as are expressly, or by necessity or unavoidable implication, conferred by the Constitution upon the Federal Government. I readily concede that the Federal Government is supreme within its constitutional sphere. I am not one of those who would minimize the National Government or deny to it all of those great powers necessary to carry into effect the objects of its creation or to enable it to move on to the accomplishment of its high purposes or to the achieve-ment of that destiny which the future holds in store for it. But I believe that those high purposes and that splendid destiny can be best subserved and be more surely reached within the Constitution than without it—by adhering to the Consti-tution rather than by violating it. While I concede that the National Government is supreme within its constitutional sphere, at the same time I contend with equal earnestness that the right of the States to exercise sovereignty over those subjects not granted to the Federal Government is equally supreme.

In determining the boundaries of sovereignty between the General Government and the States the question for determination is not so much what powers have been specifically reserved to the States, but what powers have expressly or by implication been granted to the Federal Government. If the grant is not found to be vested in the Federal Government by some express provision of the Constitution; or it does not, by necessary implication, flow from an express grant, and necessary to carry into effect its purpose, then it remains in the States. Guided by these rules, which have been universally accepted by the highest authorities upon constitutional law in this country, where can the power be found in the Constitution of the United States to either force the States to create and establish and maintain a public school system, or that gives to the Federal Government any right to interfere with the management or control of such schools? No such authority can be found in any provision of the Constitution and none such can be implied from any grant to the Federal Government.

Mr. President, if by the broadest and most latitudinous construction it might be contended that the Federal Government could itself establish and maintain public schools throughout the land, which, I do not concede, no one would for a moment contend that the Federal Government could force a State to do so, or if the State did establish such schools voluntarily could it be contended that the Federal Government could invade the State and assume control of such schools. State schools are purely local in their character, and the right to create and administer them is clearly one of the reserved powers of the States

Justice Greer, in 5 Howard, 631, thus expresses the views of the Supreme Court as to the nature and character of the reserved powers of the States and the subjects embraced within those powers:

It has been frequently decided by this court that the powers which relate to merely municipal regulations or what may more properly be called "internal policies" are not surrendered by the States or restrained by the Constitution of the United States, and that, consequently, in relation to these the authority of a State is complete, unqualified, and exclusive. Without attempting to define what are the peculiar subjects or limits of this power it may be safely affirmed that any law for the restraint and punishment of crime or for the preservation of the public peace, health, or morals must come within this category.

State public schools are created under State enactments.

State public schools are created under State enactments. They are supported by taxation upon the people of such States.

The Federal Government contributes nothing to their support. Such schools are maintained for the benefit of the citizens of such State as a part of its internal policy so as to provide for their children an education which will broaden and enlarge the intelligence of its citizenship, increase their productive capacity, and contribute to the preservation of law and order and good government within the State.

The right of a State to establish and control its public schools is no less a reserved right of the State than the right to create and manage its asylums, hospitals, or its penitentiaries. If the Federal Government can, in utter disregard and defiance of the laws and constitution of a State, make and enforce a treaty which forces into the public schools of the States aliens of the Mongolian race, contrary to the reasonable rules which the State has provided for admission, then the Federal Government can, by the exercise of the same authority, rob the State of every reserved right, regulate and control its municipal and domestic concerns, annul its laws, and abrogate its constitution whenever the treaty-making power of the National Government shall see fit to assume to exercise such power.

If a treaty made by the Federal Government can force a Mongolian into the same local schools in California with the white children in defiance of the laws of California and against the judgment and wishes and over the protest of its citizens, then can the Federal Government by a like treaty force the negroes of Cuba, Santo Domingo, Hayti, and the Kongo into the schools of Tennessee or Georgia or other States of the Union side by side with the white children of those States and in defiance of their laws, wisely made for the separation of the races. To such a doctrine I can never accede.

And further, Mr. President, if it be once conceded that the right of the States to administer their domestic affairs, their reserved police powers, can be annulled and destroyed by treaty, how long will it be before that power will be assumed and exercised by the Federal Government without a treaty? Mr. President, we do not have to wait. I am not called upon to indulge in prophecy as to the future. We are already face to face with the issue. The proposition has already been openly announced and the purpose boldly proclaimed by one high in authority and closely associated with this Administration to wipe out State lines; to supervise and dominate, if not to take from the States, the right to legislate upon and to administer their internal and domestic affairs, and to vest absolute, un-limited, and supreme power in the Federal Government, and that, too, not by amendment to the Constitution, but by judicial and executive construction.

The same distinguished statesmen who are proposing by treaty to take from one of the States, the State of California, its sovereign right to administer its local schools are proposing by construction to take from all the States other and even greater rights.

On the 12th day of December, 1906, the Hon. Elihu Root, Secretary of State, delivered a speech in the city of New York, in which he gave utterance to these extraordinary and startling sentiments:

Under the conditions which now exist no State can live unto itself alone and regulate its affairs with sole reference to its own treasury, its own convenience, its own special interests. Every State is bound to frame its legislation and its administration with reference not only to its own special affairs, but with reference to the effect upon all its sister States.

It is repless for the advocates of State rights to inveigh against the

It is useless for the advocates of State rights to inveigh against the supremacy of the constitutional laws of the United States, or against the extension of national authority in the fields of necessary control, where the States themselves fall in the performance of their duy.

The governmental control, which the people of the United States deem just and necessary, they will have. It may be that such control could better be exercised in particular instances by the governments of the States, but the people will have the control they need either from the States or from the National Government, and if the States fail to furnish it in due measure sooner or later constructions of the Constitution will be found to vest the power where it will be exercised—in the National Government.

Mr. President, when these words are read, in the light of

Mr. President, when these words are read, in the light of utterances made by the present Chief Executive, at Harrisburg, Pa., on October 4, 1906, they become still more potent with meaning and with danger. Upon that occasion President Roosevelt said:

In some cases this governmental action must be exercised by the several States individually. In yet others it has become increasingly evident that no efficient State action is possible, and that we need, through executive action, through legislation, and through judicial interpretation and construction, to increase the power of the Federal Conservent

Mr. President, the country has been recently treated to the publication of certain correspondence between the President and Mr. Storer, late ambassador of the United States at Vienna, more entertaining, perhaps, than edifying. As those letters have been widely published, I am justified in assuming that they have been released from the ban of confidential. In one of those letters the President is quoted as saying, in substance, that Secretary Root was the only member of his Cabinet to whom he could look or upon whom he could depend for clear, strong, and sufficient exposition, in public speech, upon the platform, of the policies and purposes of his Administration. As to the propriety or justness of that statement it is not for me to say

If it be true, then the carefully prepared deliverances of the distinguished Secretary, above quoted, become doubly signifi-cant. Emanating from so high a source, and under such cir-cumstances, they must be given all the weight and sanctity of an official pronouncement. And coming thus, Mr. President, to all thoughtful and conservative men, they sound the alarm; they convey a warning to the American people that danger is ahead. The States must execute their powers and discharge their duties, as the head of the Federal Government demands, or those powers will be taken from them and executed by the National Government. The long-cherished right of home rule, the constitutionally reserved powers of the States to administer their domestic affairs in consonance with the judgment and interests of their people is boldly, I will not say brazenly, threatened unless the sovereign States bow the knee and "leg-islate" and "administer" in a manner that shall meet the approval of the National Government, or those charged with its administration.

Mr. President, this is the doctrine of expediency, that the National Government should do whatever needs to be done or is not sufficiently done by the States, whether constitutional or not. A doctrine dangerous in the highest degree, and utterly at variance with our system, which is a government of law, with a written Constitution, limiting and defining the scope and powers of the Federal Government. It brings us face to face with the startling issue, Is the Constitution still to be a binding, a vital, a controlling influence in our Government, or is it to be brushed aside whenever it stands in the way of what appears to be expedient or desirable?

Mr. President, the thirteen sovereign States which fought the Revolutionary war and won their independence were slow and reluctant to surrender to the keeping of a Federal Government any of those inherent sovereign powers for which they had struggled so long and sacrificed so much.

At last, encompassed by dangers from without, and realizing their weakness when divided, they yielded. But they only consented to the Union and the creation of a Federal Government under a written chart, in which the metes and bounds of the powers which they surrendered were distinctly marked and clearly defined. And so apprehensive were the States, under the influence of the wise, far-seeing, and patriotic men who guided them, that the Federal Government might at some later day, by construction or usurpation, assume other and greater powers than those nominated in the bond, that almost contemporaneously with the adoption of the Constitution they demanded and secured an amendment, embodied in the tenth article, by which it is distinctly and specifically declared that

All powers not delegated to the United States by the Constitution, nor prohibited by it to the States, are reserved to the States respectively, or to the people.

Mr. President, the Constitution was adopted, the Federal Republic was created by the States and the people of the States, by their action as separate and independent units, and not by the people of the United States in the aggregate. When the people of the States thus created the Federal Government and gave it certain limited and defined powers and retained all the rest, those States did not thereby cease to be sovereign and independent States.

Mr. President, for the first seventy-five years of our national life we lived and grew and prospered under this Constitution with a large and, I believe, the dominating influence of popular thought, if not of judicial construction, standing steadfastly for the preservation to the States and the people of every right and power not clearly delegated to the Federal Government. The civil war came. Thousands of the purest, the best, and the bravest of American manhood, North and South, with millions of treasure, were sacrificed to settle and determine the constitutional question, whether a sovereign State, which had vol-untarily entered the compact of union, could, at its will, voluntarily withdraw from it.

The decision was reached not upon reason and by judicial interpretation, but because one side had heavier guns-more men and greater treasure—than the other. When the end came, however, and the final judgment was pronounced, the men who had recognized the supreme right of the States as against the supreme right of the nation, and whose honesty of purpose and patriotic devotion to principle will not be questioned by impartial history, accepted as final every fair and legitimate result From then the enduring national character of the of the war. Government of the United States was fixed and determined. But that was all that was determined by that bloody struggle. In every other respect our system of Government remained unchanged, with practically the same limited grants to the Federal Government and the same constitutional powers reserved to the States. It is true that from that time forth the pendulum has swung steadily toward a more centralized government. Under this influence the Federal Government has assumed to ex-ercise powers never anticipated or even dreamed of by the founders of the Republic. Powers so sweeping, so far-reaching, and sometimes so destructive of the reserved rights and powers of the States that if they had been known or believed to lie hidden in the grants to the National Government would have proven fatal to the adoption of the Constitution.

But, Mr. President, through all these years of insidious aggressions of the National Government upon the reserved rights of the States there has ever been heard to issue from the silent chamber across the hall, in which sit the final conservators of the Constitution, a voice steady and clear, proclaiming the sovereignty of the States no less than that of the nation.

The Supreme Court has said:

The Supreme Court has said:

Notwithstanding the adoption of these three postbellum amendments, the National Government still remains one of enumerated powers, and the tenth amendment, which reads "the powers not delegated to the United States are reserved to the States, respectively, and to the people," is not shorn of its vitality. (Hodges v. United States, 203 U. S.)

But the perpetuity and indissolubility of the Union by no means implies the loss of distinct and individual existence or of the right of self-government by the States. Under the Articles of Confederation each State retained its sovereignty, freedom, and independence, and every power, jurisdiction, and right not expressly delegated to the United States. Under the Constitution, though the powers of the States were much restricted, still all powers not delegated to the United States nor prohibited to the States are reserved to the States, respectively, or to the people. And we have already had occasion to remark at this term that "the people of each State compose a State having its own government and endowed with all the functions essential to separate and independent existence," and that "without the States in union there could be no such political body as the United States." (County of Lane v. State of Oregon, 7 Wall., 76.) Not only, therefore, can there be no loss of separate and independent autonomy of the States through their union under the Constitution, but it may be not unreasonably said that the preservation of the States and the maintenance of their governments are as much within the design and care of the Constitution as the preservation of the Union and the maintenance of the National Government. The Constitution in all its provisions looks to an indestructible Union composed of indestructible States. (Texas v. White, 7 Wall., 725.)

Not only that, Mr. President, but never has any political party, in this country dared to write a platform or enunciate a doctrine which had for its end and purpose the abolition of State lines and the destruction of the reserved, sovereign powers Mr. Lincoln, the head, the genius, the exemplar of the States. of the Republican party in its earlier and better days, stood upon a platform which said "That the maintenance inviolate of the rights of the States, and especially the right of each State to order and control its own domestic institutions according to its own judgment exclusively, is essential to the balance of power on which the perfection and endurance of our political fabric depend.'

Mr. President, never until now, in all our history as a nation, has any statesman of national consequence of any party, holding high and responsible office, boldly threatened and proposed to recast our Constitution, to remodel our Government, and to utterly wipe out, obliterate, and destroy the reserved sovereign rights of the States and centralize absolute and supreme power in the nation.

The distinguished Secretary says every State is bound to frame its legislation and its administration not alone with reference to its own interests, but with reference to the interests of the whole country. Then, is there to be a censorship upon the legislation which the States are to be permitted to enact? And if so, who is to exercise that supreme function to determine whether the States exercise their powers and discharge their duties wisely or well? The Federal head of necessity, for none other is in contemplation.

Mr. President, leave to the people of a State the power to determine and the right to judge for themselves what is wisest and best for them respecting their local and domestic affairs and they are a free people. Take that right from them and they are not a free people. Hence it was that the statesmen who wrote our Constitution and spoke our Government into life, looking back over the long and bloody struggle of mankind for liberty, the very essence of which is the right of a people to order, to shape, to determine, to control their own local and domestic affairs in their own way and in accordance with their own judgment and interest, wisely concluded that that liberty could only be secured and preserved by leaving those powers in the States and the people directly and immediately affected. It is now boldly proposed to strip the States of this conceded constitutional power.

The distinguished Secretary shrewdly intimates that these extraordinary and unconstitutional powers are needed to curb and control the great trusts and combinations of capital. President, that is but the sugar coat put on the centralization pill to induce the people to swallow it. If those who are crying out for more and greater national power are in good faith, let them exhaust the power now clearly possessed by the Federal Government. If they want to suppress the trusts, let them modify and reform the tariff, behind which the trusts are hiding and through which they are robbing the people of more than a just share of their earnings. If there is a dangerous overcapitalization of railroads and other corporations, as the honorable Secretary suggests, let them empower the Interstate Commerce Commission to investigate and determine the value of all railroads engaged in interstate commerce and fix rates that will yield a fair return upon the actual investment, as was proposed in the Senate last session and voted down by the majority. If the accumulation of colossal fortunes be a menace to the Republic, let them cease granting special privileges and pass an income and an inheritance tax that the wealth of the country may be forced to contribute its fair share to the support of the Government which protects and defends it. But, Mr. President, we must not forget that no end, however just or however much to be desired, should be sought through the usurpation of power.

And how, Mr. President, is this change to be wrought and this extraordinary power to be conferred on the Federal Government? It is conceded that no such power as it is proposed to assume now exists under the Constitution; upon the contrary, it is expressly reserved to the States and to the people. Is it proposed to pursue the legal and orderly process of amendment as provided in the Constitution itself? Not at all. That mode is far too slow and too uncertain for these strenuous days. Power, extraordinary and supreme, must be grasped, and grasped at once and without delay. Every business, every interest affecting the industries, the morals, the prosperity of every State which, in the judgment of the Federal Government or those administering it, needs regulating or is not wisely or sufficiently regulated by the States must be forced under Federal domination and control. Local differences must be ignored, local needs and desires must be brushed aside and State lines wiped out, and the legislative conduct of every State and community must be measured by and be made to conform to the standard fixed Washington. And this is to be accomplished, not by the orderly process of amendment to the Constitution, by the consent of the States and the people, but by the devious, uncertain, and dangerous process of executive and judicial construction.

Mr. President, if the people want to change their form of government, if the people of the States desire to surrender any or all of their reserved rights to the National Government, if the people are ready to give up their right and power to administer and control their domestic affairs as seems wisest and best for them, the way is open, the mode is provided in the Constitution itself. To take those rights from them in any other way is usurpation, is revolution.

Need I pause, Mr. President, to point out the ills that would inevitably flow, the wrongs that surely would be done, the injustice that would certainly be wrought if the power of home rule, the sovereign power of the States to administer their internal affairs, be curtailed or destroyed and enlarged and discretionary power be vested in the Federal Government? It is too manifest to require elaboration. Ours is a great and widely extended country, stretching from Gulf to Lakes and from ocean to ocean, with widely varying climate, productions, and needs, and peopled with a citizenship whose habits, mode of thought, tastes, desires, and environment are as various as the States in which they live. The local and domestic demands and conditions of one State vary from those of another. Each must be the judge of its own needs and its own interests, and each must be left free to order and administer its own affairs in consonance with its own sovereign will, or liberty will be a byword and a sham.

"The people," says Mr. Root, "will have the control they need." Where and who are the people who demand a revamp of our Constitution by somebody's construction? Who are the people who are making these demands and for whom the distinguished Secretary assumes to speak? Where is the State which has asked to be allowed to surrender its sovereign powers to the keeping of the National Government? Where is the convention of the people which has declared for it? Where is the statesman of national consequence and influence, except the two distinguished statesmen from whom I have quoted, who has openly indorsed it? The voice of a free and untrammeled press from one end of the land to the other has protested against it. Then, who are the people? Mr. President, I speak with no unkindly feelings of either the President or the able Secretary of State. They may be moved by the highest motives of patriotism for aught I know. I question no man's motives. The President has done many things which I heartly approve and advocated some measures which I indorse.

In the recent Brownsville matter I unqualifiedly indorsed his action in discharging the battalion of soldiers, not because they were negroes, but because I believed he had the legal authority to do what he did and because I believed those soldiers thoroughly deserved dismissal, both for the protection of the honor and good name of the Army and for the peace and security of the people. Though differing from the President in politics, I shall not hesitate on that account to commend where I think he is right, nor shall I refrain from criticism where I believe he is wrong. It will be a sad day for the liberties of the people of this Republic when either they or their representatives here hesitate to criticise the official conduct of their servant whom they have placed in the White House simply because he holds high office whenever they believe his speech or his conduct deserve such criticism.

So, Mr. President, I challenge the authority of President Roosevelt or Secretary Root to speak for the people of the forty-five States of this Union touching a fundamental change in their government. The real voice of the people can only be heard through their State legislatures or through a convention, as provided for in the Constitution.

And may I be permitted, with all due respect, to suggest that the regard of these distinguished statesmen for the limitations of the Constitution and the simple ways of democratic government, as exhibited in their records in the past, is not so conspicuous as to entitle them to speak with authority for the great conservative, Constitution-loving masses of the American people. The one is the man whose strenuous nature has chafed more restlessly under constitutional restraints than any man perhaps who ever sat in the Executive chair. The one is the man who, without the consent of Congress, committed an act of war by winking at, if not encouraging, insurrection against Colombia and then virtually declared war against that helpless Republic by announcing that it should not suppress a "mock rebellion' within its own territory. The one is the man who overrode and trampled under foot the treaty-making power, vested by the Constitution in the Senate, by making and putting into practical effect a treaty with San Domingo, which the Senate has for more than two years persistently refused to ratify. The one is the man who has only recently threatened to use "all the forces, military and civil, of the United States" to break down and override a law of a State, made in pursuance of its reserved constitutional powers, and to force American fathers to admit grown Mongolians into intimate relations with their children, which they regard as hurtful and dangerous. The one is the man who, with pomp and ceremony, followed by an armored fleet trailing at his heels, after the manner of the German Kaiser, recently sailed forth to visit his outlying provinces of Panama and Porto Rico.

The other is the man whose subtle brain is said to have evolved the "constructive recess" between 12 o'clock and 60 minutes after 11; who recently visited the capitals to the south of us to show them the "big stick," for the occasion wreathed in roses, and graciously bid them be good and pay their debts.

These are the people, eminently distinguished, but not numerous, whose voice is heard crying for more and greater powers to the National Government. Mr. President, I can not but think that possibly this is not the voice of John crying in the wilderness, "Prepare ye the way of the Lord, make his paths straight," but rather that of the "Sadducees," who must Mr. President, if first "bring forth fruits meet for repentance." the boldly declared purposes of these modern disciples of Hamilton, who are as far in advance of Hamilton on the way to consolidated and centralized power as Hamilton was of the men who wrote and framed the Constitution, can be consummated, it means a revolution in spirit if not in the form of our Government-a revolution, silent, if you please, but none the less certain and effective. It means to weaken or to overturn our dual form of government and to break down the constitutional checks and balances between State and national jurisdiction and to concentrate discretionary and unrestrained power in the Federal Government.

Mr. President, the right of local self-government, reserved by the Constitution to the States, is dear to the hearts of the American people in every State of this Union. No less North than South; no less East than West; but nowhere is it esteemed of greater or more supreme importance than by the people of the South. Upon that subject the people of my State and of the section of the Union from which I come feel deeply. For through all the vicissitudes of the past it has been their shield and their protection. When in the hour of bitterness and passion the civil rights bill was forced upon them, with all dangerous and demoralizing tendencies, it was to the right of sovereign States to order and administer their own domestic affairs, reserved to them in the Constitution, to which they appealed. And it was in maintenance of that principle that the Supreme Court of the United States declared that law unconstitutional. To it they must look, upon it they must depend for the power to deal with, to carry forward, and to ultimately solve the race problem, which even now hangs over them and threatens their peace, their happiness, their very civilization.

But, Mr. President, this is no sectional question, and I thank God that it is not. This Republic can never again divide upon sectional lines, either the North from the South, or the East from the West. Every section of this great Republic is so closely knit into the business and commercial and social life of every other that we are bound together by the indissoluble bonds of blood and interest. This question affects the sovereign rights of every State in the Union. The sovereign rights of California and the Pacific States to meet and deal with a race question with which they are threatened is no less menaced than the sovereign power of the Southern States to go on dealing with a race problem which for more than forty years has hedged them about. The people of the Pacific States are awakening to the danger of admitting into their midst and of trying to absorb into their social and industrial life an oriental, a nonassimilating race. In dealing with that problem they have our profoundest sympathy, and when the time comes to meet, and if possible to avert it, I have no doubt they will have, so far as we can give it, our aid and support.

But, Mr. President, as we in the South realize that our race problem can only be settled by our own people, who know its every environment, and who appreciate its delicate and perplexing difficulties, and upon whose hearts and consciences it rests as a perpetual burden; as we know it can never be solved by a people far removed from its fatal touch, and whose minds are not filled with an appalling sense of the deep racial difficulties with which it is hedged about, so I say that the sovereign rights of California should not be invaded, and that she should be left free to meet and settle her problem in her own way, trusting as we must to her patriotism and sense of justice for its right

Neither, Mr. President, should this be made a party question. But if it is the purpose of the President and that portion of his party who agree with him to commit the Republican party to a policy and to have it go to battle upon an issue which leads speedily and surely to the subversion of the sovereignty and independence of the States, then I have no doubt that the Democratic party will accept the issue and upon it will stand solid and united. The Democratic party has always been the party of the Constitution, adhering steadfastly to the principle that only by keeping the nation and the State each within its con-stitutional sphere of power could the liberties of the people be strictional sphere of power count the interties of the people be surely conserved. And it may be that in this wild orgie for national power, uncertain and unrestrained, to dominate and regulate everything and everybody, regardless of the Constitu-tion, the great conservative masses of the people, who believe in liberty with law, will turn to the Democratic party for security and repose.

But, Mr. President, this question rises above party. fundamental; it is vital. It goes to the preservation in its constitutional integrity of our wisely devised and constructed system of dual Government, with its division of powers between State and nation. Is it a wise system? Has it worked well in the past? Under it in little more than a century we have risen from thirteen weak to forty-five powerful States. From 3,000,000 we have multiplied to 85,000,000 people. From a strip along the Atlantic seaboard we have crossed a continent, conquered a wilderness, and touched the Pacific shores.

In commerce and trade, both foreign and domestic, in inventions, in manufactories, in wealth and productive energy; power and influence among the nations of the world; in all the arts of peace and of war; in all that looks to the elevation and ennobling of mankind, and that makes for righteousness among men, we have, under the Constitution of the fathers, with its checks and limitations of power, grown and developed and expanded as no other people ever did in all the tide of time. This constitutional system has been sufficient for every emergency; it has met every expanding need. Then why change—why seek to weaken or remodel it?

Mr. President, it is time for the American people to pause, to reflect, and to contemplate with patriotic consecration the words of their greatest political philosopher and seer, Mr. Jef-

Let us preserve the State governments in all their rights as the most competent administrations of our domestic concerns and the surest bulwark against antirepublican tendencies. Let us preserve the General Government in its whole constitutional vigor as the sheet anchor of our peace at home and safety abroad.

Mr. President, an infant in arms when Sumter was fired upon, I know nothing, except from history and tradition, of the bitterness and strife that distracted and divided our country in the days that are happily passed and gone. To me this is a Union never divided. I would cherish and preserve it-a grand republican superstructure, resting upon and deriving its strength from forty-five massive State columns, each sovereign and complete within its constitutional sphere—the Nation supreme in things national; the States supreme in all things domestic.

NATIONAL CHILD LABOR COMMITTEE.

Mr. SPOONER submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 6364) entitled "An act to incorporate the National Child Labor Committee," having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its amendment numbered 1.
That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House numbered 2, and agree to the same.

JOHN C. SPOONER,
A. O. BACON,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

E. L. TAYLOR, Jr.,
SAMUEL W. SMITH,
T. W. SIMS,
Managers on the part of the House.

The report was agreed to.

ARMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. WARREN. In pursuance of notice heretofore given, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 23551) making appropriation for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1908.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with amend-

Mr. WARREN. I ask that the first formal reading of the bill be dispensed with, and that the bill be read for amendment, the committee amendments to be first considered.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Wyoming asks that the first formal reading of the bill be dispensed with, that the bill be read for amendment, and that the committee amendments be first considered. Without objection, that course will be pursued.

The Secretary proceeded to read the bill.

The first amendment of the Committee on Military Affairs was, on page 3, line 5, to increase the appropriation for the maintenance of the United States service schools, from $20,000 to $25,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 3, line 17, after the word dollars," to insert the following proviso:

Provided, That hereafter The Military Secretary's Department of the Army shall be known as The Adjutant-General's Department, the senior in rank of the officers of said department shall be designated by the title of The Adjutant-General, the other officers of the department shall be designated by the title of Adjutant-General, and The Military Secretary's Office of the War Department shall be known as The Adjutant-General's Office.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 5, line 18, after the word dollars," to insert the following provisos:

"dollars," to insert the following provisos:

Provided, That of the receipts of the Washington-Alaska Military Cable and Telegraph System that have been covered into the Treasury of the United States, the sum of $199,000 be, and the same is hereby, made available until expended for defraying the cost of such extensions and betterments of the system as may be approved by the Secretary of War, the extent of such extensions and the cost thereof to be reported to Congress by the Secretary of War: Provided further, That hereafter detailed estimates shall be submitted to Congress for any further extension of the cable or telegraph lines in the district of Alaska.

The amondment was agreed to.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 6, after line 4, to insert:

For expenses of the Signal Service of the Army on account of the army of Cuban pacification during the fiscal year beginning July 1, 1907, in the purchase of equipment, stores, and supplies, the engagement of services personal and not personal, and all other expenses connected with the duty of collecting and transmitting information for the Army, by telegraph and otherwise, $50,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 6, line 16, before the word "hundred," to strike out "three hundred and sixty-eight thousand one" and insert "five hundred and fifty-six thousand two;" and in the same line, after the word "dollars," to insert the following proviso:

Provided, That hereafter all commissioned officers of the Army may transfer or assign their pay accounts, when due and payable, under such regulations as the Secretary of War may prescribe.

So as to make the clause read:

For pay of officers of the line, $5,556,200: Provided, That hereafter all commissioned officers, etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 6, line 21, after the word "million," to strike out "seventy-five thousand dollars" and insert "one hundred and forty-eight thousand seven hundred and thirty dollars;" so as to read:

For pay of officers for length of service, to be paid with their current monthly pay, $1,148,730.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 7, after line 1, to insert the following proviso:

Provided, That any officer or enlisted man of the Army who has been, or who may hereafter be, detailed for duty in connection with the Jamestown Ter-Centennial Exposition shall, while actually engaged on such duty, be regarded as employed on public duty and entitled to allowances authorized by law or regulations for officers or enlisted men so employed.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 7, after line 7, to insert the following further proviso:

Provided further, That section 1330 of the Revised Statutes, authorizing leaves of absence for certain officers of the Military Academy, be, and it is hereby, extended to include officers on duty exclusively as instructors at the special service schools and staff college, and such student officers, graduates of their latest classes, as may be detailed at special service schools or staff college.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 7, line 17, to increase the appropriation for pay of enlisted men of all grades, including recruits, from $9,000,000 to $9,972,504.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 7, line 23, to increase the appropriation for aditional pay for length of service of enlisted men from $1,200,000 to $1,206,000.

The amendment was agreed to. The next amendment was, on page 8, after line 19, to strike

ELECTRICIANS, ARTILLERY CORPS.

Twenty-five master electricians, at $900 each, and one hundred electrician sergeants, at $408 each, $63,300.

Additional pay for length of service, $6,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 11, line 20, after the word "clerks," to strike out "and;" so as to read:

And said clerks, messengers, and laborers shall be employed and assigned by the Secretary of War to the offices and positions in which they are to serve.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 12, line 8, after the word "dollars," to insert the following proviso:

Provided, That when a vacancy of lieutenant-colonel shall occur in the list of either permanent or detailed officers of that grade in The Milltary Secretary's Department, the officer now holding a permanent appointment with the rank of major in that department may be promoted to such vacancy.

Mr. KEAN. Let me ask the Senator from Wyoming a question. Ought not this amendment to be changed inasmuch as the Senate has adopted the amendment on page 3?

Mr. WARREN. It is still The Military Secretary's Department, but when this provision, if adopted, takes effect on July 1 next, with the first amendment of the bill, it will thereafter be The Adjutant-General's Office, and that will carry this officer with the others.

Mr. KEAN. Then this goes into effect at once. Is that the idea?

Mr. WARREN. Whether it does or not, the title in the bill is still The Military Secretary's Department, and when the bill goes into effect, then this with the other will be changed.

Mr. BACON. I understood the Senator from Wyoming to say he wanted to have the bill simply read this afternoon.

Mr. LODGE. Oh, no.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill is being read for amendment, and the committee amendments are to be first considered.

Mr. BACON. I understood that, but I supposed from the suggestion of the Senator from Wyoming that he intended when the bill got into the Senate that these matters should all be open for further consideration, if desired.

Mr. WARREN. Of course that is my intention. That is the usual way. That is a right the Senate has with the bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the Committee on Military Affairs.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Military Affairs was, on page 15, after line 5, to strike out:

For Chief of Bureau of Insular Affairs, $5,500.

And insert:

Bureau of Insular Affairs: For officers of the Bureau of Insular Affairs, $9,000: Provided, That the Secretary of War is hereby authorized to detail an officer of the Army, whom he may consider especially well qualified, to act as principal assistant to the Chief of the Bureau of Insular Affairs of the War Department, and said principal assistant while acting under said detail shall have the rank, pay, and allowances of a major: And provided further, That the provisions of section 27 of the act of February 2, 1901, with reference to the transfer of officers of the line to the departments of the staff for tours of service, shall apply to the vacancy created by this act and to the return of the officer so detailed to the line of the Army.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 15, line 25, after the word dollars," to insert the following proviso:

Provided, That officers who served creditably in the regular or volunteer forces during the civil war prior to April 9, 1865, and who now hold the rank of brigadier-general on the active list of the Army, having previously held that rank for three years or more, shall, when retired from active service, have the rank and retired pay of major-

Mr. NELSON. I would inquire how many officers this amendment will affect, and who they are?

Mr. WARREN. From three to five, according to the number that may become major-generals by selection of the President in the usual way to fill vacancies before the age limit is reached. It will probably apply to three, possibly four.

Mr. NELSON. Is that the limit?

Mr. WARREN. There is a possibility of its applying to more than four, but it can not exceed five, I think.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the Committee on Military Affairs.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Military Affairs was, on page 17, line 3, before the word "dental," to strike out "thirty" and insert "thirty-one;" and in line 5, before the word "dollars," to strike out "fifty-six thousand one hundred and sixty" and insert "fifty-seven thousand nine hundred and sixty;" so as to make the clause read:

For thirty-one dental surgeons, $57,960.

Mr. WARREN. To complete that paragraph, I move to insert the amendment I send to the desk.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Wyoming proposes an amendment, which will be stated.

The Secretary. On page 17, after line 5, change the period to a colon and insert, after the word "dollars:"

Provided, That in addition to the dental surgeons now authorized by law there shall hereafter be one for the United States Military Academy.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 17, line 6, to increase the appropriation for contract surgeons from $300,000 to $360,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 17, line 10, after the word "cents," to insert the following proviso:

Provided, That hereafter any paymaster's clerk of the Army who shall have had thirty-five years' faithful service in the Army may be nominated by the President and, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, be appointed a first lieutenant, mounted, United States Army, and placed on the retired list thereof as of that rank.

Mr. NELSON. I inquire of the chairman of the committee if this amendment does not give a civilian a pension, and is it not therefore the beginning of a civil pension list? It takes a civilian clerk and puts him on the roll as a retired Army officer.

Is not that a way of giving a civilian employee a civil pension?

Mr. WARREN. I think not. By the construction of the law until it was inadvertently changed two or three years ago, paymasters' clerks were considered officers in computing extra pay for foreign service, etc., and up to the time when that change and one other occurred many of our best paymasters were taken from the ranks of paymasters' clerks.

A paymaster's clerk practically becomes an officer of the Army. He has many of the responsibilities of an officer. In addition, he has his bond to give; he has to travel; he has to do very many things that an officer does, so far as the service is concerned; and yet while every other man in the Army, enlisted man or commissioned officer, has the privileges of a pension for self or family, the right of burial in national cemeteries, of increased pay for length of service, and of admission into the Soldiers' Home, etc., the paymaster's clerk is left out in the cold as to all those rights and privileges. I consider the proposed amendment a very just and wise one.

Mr. NELSON. Would not the effect of this legislation be ultimately to place every paymaster's clerk upon the pension roll and have retired civilians drawing pensions for life?

Mr. WARREN. I desire to say in all seriousness that we want to hang up just that kind of a prize, which a paymaster's clerk can strive for and finally reach through close application and hard work. He can only reach it after he has served thirty-five long years faithfully and well. If then considered so good and faithful a man that he merits reward, the President may select him and put him on the retired list at the small pay of a retired first lieutenant, mounted. He now has no pensionable status. He has no soldiers' home privilege. He has no place of burial by the Government. He has nothing but poverty and want to compensate for long and faithful service, unless we in some way provide for him.

As I have said, heretofore paymasters' clerks, who were adepts and always doing full and satisfactory service, were sooner or later made paymasters. By a late law we have-

Mr. CLAY. Mr. President—
The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Wyoming yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. WARREN. Certainly.
Mr. CLAY. Will the Senator let me ask him—I ought to know, but I do not-whether the paymaster's clerk is appointed by the Government and is an employee or officer of the Government, or whether he is simply appointed by the paymaster?

Mr. WARREN. He is appointed by the War Department. He does not have a commission, is not appointed by the President and confirmed by the Senate.

Mr. CLAY. Who appoints him, then?

Mr. WARREN. He is appointed by the War Department. Mr. CLAY. By the paymaster himself? Does the paymaster appoint his own clerk?

Mr. WARREN. No; the Paymaster-General, or, really, the Secretary of War.

Mr. BACON. I desire to ask the Senator a question, How many clerks now in the service will this affect? I say affect. Of course it will affect all, but I mean how many of them are now in a position to be the recipients of this benefit?

Mr. WARREN. Not to exceed two. Mr. BACON. It is not, then, made with special reference to any particular clerk?

Mr. WARREN. It is made with reference to all clerks who have performed the service for thirty-five years, and it will reach two men at the present time, and a few more later on, but not for several years.

Mr. BACON. What is the prospect as to the number who within a reasonable or short space of time are to be affected

Mr. WARREN. I will tell the Senator in a moment.
Mr. BACON. I ask the question simply for the purpose of getting an idea as to the number of these clerks who have been for a long time in the service.

Mr. WARREN. I think I can inform the Senator from this We have in the Pay Department one who has been thirtyeight years and eight months in the service; one who has been thirty-five years and two months; one who has been in service thirty-one years and eight months, and one twenty-five years and eight months, and then from that down to eighteen years. There are but fifteen altogether who have served eighteen years

Mr. BACON. That is sufficient, unless the Senator desires to go further.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President-

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Wyoming yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. WARREN. I do. Mr. NELSON. While I dislike to criticise the Army bill and have no doubt the Committee on Military Affairs have done the very best they could, it seems to me that these paymasters' clerks are only civilian employees, and that this is a discrimination in favor of that class of employees as respects all the other employees of the Government. We have in the various Departments of the Government a large number of clerks who have served faithfully and well thirty-five years, forty years, and over. They have no such provision made for them by which they can retire and receive a commission. This is practically a discrimination between those clerks and these clerks who happen to be clerks of paymasters. For that reason it seems to me to be unjust. If we are going to do anything for the old clerks to take care of them, we ought to do it for all, and not discriminate in favor of the few who happen to be within the purview of the Army.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, the condition of a paymaster's clerk is entirely different from that of any other civilian employee of the Government. He acts as paymaster a great deal of the time and is responsible for the funds. He has at all times to be in attendance upon the paymaster with whom he is detailed. He has to go to every place in this country or abroad where there are United States troops to be paid. He sleeps in the same blankets with his principal on the plains and he occuples the same tent, room, or bed at different places. He has to furnish his bond and pay for it. In reality his condition all of the time, the wants that he must make good, the duties that he must perform, the expenses he must incur, are not such as compare with any other civilian employee.

I wish to say again that it is and will be very hard for the Department to secure the services, at the pay that is allowed, of efficient paymasters' clerks, unless some chance of promotion or ultimate reward is added to present conditions and emolu-

Mr. LODGE. He is under military law. Mr. WARREN. He is under military law, and is liable at any time to trial by court-martial as well as by civil law.

Formerly many superior men took these places in the service, and they were almost sure to be made paymasters. In fact, the paymaster who would be Paymaster-General now, excepting that he gracefully stepped aside temporarily so that an older man might take it and retire from it, was made a paymaster from paymaster's clerk. I refer to Colonel Towar.

Paymaster Muhlenberg and several others, who are among the best paymasters we have in service now, were formerly paymasters' clerks. There are a great many who have passed away who were made paymasters from paymasters' clerks. But by a recent change in law all paymasters must be appointed or detailed from the Army proper.

Now, with the small salary paid paymasters' clerks, and with the great responsibilities upon them, it seems to me highly necessary, as a matter of protection for the Government itself, to offer some inducement for men to spend so long a time as thirtyfive years as paymasters' clerks in the Army. If they spend that length of time, they should have some little provision for the hereafter, which every other man in either the combative or the general-service force is provided with now.

The paymaster's clerk is entirely different from the Department clerk, who has a permanent and settled home. If the paymaster's clerk is a married man, he has to have always, or nearly always, two homes. If he is in the field or traveling, he must maintain himself away from home and at the same time maintain his family at home.

I do not think there should be any objection to the passage of this provision.

Mr. BACON. I should like to ask the Senator from Wyoming question. I understand the quartermaster's clerks are not bonded?

Mr. WARREN. The quartermasters' clerks do not have the handling of funds.

Mr. BACON. There is that distinction between them, is there not?

Mr. WARREN. Yes; and there is another difference. quartermaster's clerk out at an Army post is one of the employees at that post, with a settled home provided for him. paymaster's clerk has to go all over the United States and the possessions of the United States-Porto Rico, Hawaii, Alaska, or the Philippines-obeying orders no matter where they take

Mr. BACON. In other words, the Senator means that paymasters' clerks have responsibilities and duties and labors that do not attach to the other clerical force?

Mr. WARREN. Exactly so.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 18, after line 21, to insert: For extra pay to enlisted men employed on extra duty as switch-board operators at each interior post of the Army, $8,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 19, line 2, to increase the appropriation for mileage to officers and contract surgeons when authorized by law, from $500,000 to $550,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 19, line 12, before the word officers," to strike out "commissioned," so as to make the " officers," clause read:

For additional 10 per cent increase on pay of officers serving beyond the limits of the States comprising the Union and the Territories of the United States contiguous thereto (excepting Porto Rico and Hawaii), as provided by act approved June 30, 1902, the time of such service to be counted from the date of departure from said States to the date of return thereto, $210,000.

Mr. DU PONT. I should like to ask the Senator from Wyoming what is the effect of striking out the word "commissioned?"

Mr. WARREN. That is to make the proposed legislation conform to the old law, so that paymasters' clerks can collect their foreign pay allowance the same as they did before. inadvertence on the part of the committee, I think, on the last year's appropriation bill that word was put in where it had never appeared before; that is all.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Philippine Sconts," on page 21, line 14, before the word "of," to strike out "encampment" and insert "encampments;" so as to make the clause read:

Encampments of organized militia with troops of the Regular Army.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 21, line 20, before the word "encampments," to strike out "brigade or division;" so as to make the clause read:

For paying the expenses of regiments, battalions, squadrons, and batteries of the organized militia of any State, Territory, or of the District of Columbia which may be authorized by the Secretary of War to participate in such encampments as may be established for the field instruction of the troops of the Regular Army, as provided by sections 15 and 21 of the act of January 21, 1903, entitled "An act to promote the efficiency of the militia, and for other purposes," $1,000,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, at the top of page 22, to insert:

For the purchase of flags for use on Memorial Day in suitably decorating the graves of soldiers and sailors of the Union Army buried in national cemeteries, $2,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of War.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 22, after line 5, to strike

For paying claims for damages incident to the Army maneuvers at West Point, Ky., in the year 1903, the sum of $2.837.24, to be immediately available: Provided, That the sum of $2.837.24 of the appropriation for the militia herein shall be expended in paying claims allowed by the board of officers convened by Special Orders, No. 162, Headquarters Department of the Lakes, September 6, 1903, for maneuvers at West Point, Ky., in the year 1903.

And to insert:

For settlement of 256 approved claims for damages to and loss of private property in the United States, Cuba, Porto Rico, and the Philippine Islands, $35,271.10.

Mr. KEAN. I ask the chairman of the committee, the Sena-

Mr. Weard. I ask the charman of the committee, the Senator from Wyoming, what are those claims?

Mr. WARREN. They are for small damages that have occurred through the firing of heavy artillery at encampments or by barges, one striking the other, damages to property near post target ranges, etc. They are small matters. There are 256 claims altographer claims altogether.

Mr. KEAN. Do they include the part that is stricken out?

Mr. WARREN. They include the part that is stricken out.
Mr. KEAN. And also include a great many of the claims the Senator is so familiar with, that we have had before the Committee on Claims—that is, claims for small amounts?

Mr. WARREN. Yes; all of them have been passed upon by boards of survey and approved by the Department. Under the law the Department can not pay them. It seemed fairer to pay not only those the House had put in, but the entire lot that stood on all fours with them.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 25, line 25, to increase the total appropriation for the maintenance of the Subsistence Department of the Army from $6,499,984.80 to $6,832,761.15.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Quartermaster's Department," on page 26, line 20, after the word "storage," to insert "for the construction, operation, and maintenance of laundries at military posts in the United States and its island possessions;" so as to read:

Regular supplies of the Quartermaster's Department, including their care and protection, consisting of stoves and heating apparatus required for heating offices, hospitals, barracks and quarters, and recruiting stations, and United States military prison; also ranges and stoves, and appliances for cooking and serving food at posts and on transports, and repair and maintenance of such heating and cooking appliances; of fuel and lights for enlisted men, including recruits, guards, hospitals, storehouses, and offices, and for sale to officers, and including also fuel and engine supplies required in the operation of modern batteries at established posts; for post bakeries; for ice machines and their maintenance where required for the health and comfort of the troops and for cold storage; for the construction, operation, and maintenance of laundries at military posts in the United States and its island possessions, etc.

etc.
The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the item of appropriation for regular supplies of the Quartermaster's Department, on page 27, line 20, after the word "reports," to strike out "$5,500,000" and insert "$6,775,511.07: Provided, That hereafter the heat and light actually necessary for the authorized allowance of quarters for officers and enlisted men shall be furnished at the expense of the Inited States under such regulations as the Secretary of War may prescribe;" so as to read:

Of straw for soldiers' bedding, and of stationery, including blank books for the Quartermaster's Department, certificates for discharged soldiers, blank forms for the Pay and Quartermaster's Departments, and for printing Department orders and reports, $6,775.511.07: Provided, That hereafter the heat and light actually necessary, etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 29, line 21, after the word "guard," to insert the following proviso:

Provided, That in addition to the number of chaplains now authorized by law there shall hereafter be one, with the rank of captain, for the United States military prison at Fort Leavenworth, Kans.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 29, line 24, after the word 'Kansas," to strike out the following proviso:

Provided, That hereafter no part of the moneys appropriated for use of the Quartermaster's Department shall be used in payment of extraduty pay for the Army service men in the Quartermaster's Department at West Point.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 31, line 24, to increase the appropriation for the maintenance of the Quartermaster's Department from $1,900,933.72 to $1,944,016.72.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 32, line 6, after the word "hundred," to strike out "thousand dollars" and insert "and $93,723.37;" so as to read:

Horses for cavalry, artillery, and engineers: For the purchase of horses for the cavalry, artillery, and engineers, service school and staff colleges, and for the Indians scouts, and for such infantry and members of the Hospital Corps in field campaigns as may be required to be mounted, and the expenses incident thereto, $493,723.37.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 32, line 21, after the word "troops," to strike out "other than Seacoast Artillery;" and in line 24, after the word "messes," to insert "and such heavy permanent furniture for officers' quarters;" so as to read:

Barracks and quarters: For barracks and quarters for troops, store-houses for the safe-keeping of military stores, for offices, recryiting stations, to provide such furniture for the public rooms of officers' messes and such heavy permanent furniture for officers' quarters at military posts as may be approved by the Secretary of War, etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the appropriation for barracks and quarters, on page 34, line 9, after the words "Secretary of War," to strike out "$2,000,000" and insert "$5,867,724."

Mr. CARTER. I should like to have the Senator in charge of the bill explain the cause for this very large increase proposed by the committee.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, the House for some reason divided the barracks and quarters and put the appropriation under two heads. They had in the bill between $3,000,000 and $4,000,000, and on the motion of some one-and I may say that it was not a member of the Military Affairs or the general Appropriation Committee, as I remember-one of their appropriations was stricken out on a point of order; so that left only $2,000,000 in the bill where the House had intended to appropriate between $3,000,000 and $4,000,000.

Then added to that is the estimate, or a portion of the estimate, made necessary by the passage of the artillery bill, which increases the efficiency of the Army through its artillery. This law passed after the House had acted upon the Army bill and after it had left the jurisdiction of the House and had come over

The amount now proposed represents the sum of the three items—first, $2,000,000 left in the House bill; second, the amount that was stricken out on the point of order, and, third, the minimum amount, the lowest amount estimated by the Department as necessary for this year on account of the artillery bill.

I may say we are still some millions below the official estimate made by the Department to Congress. Indeed, we are below the first estimate that came up before we had increased the artillery.

Mr. CARTER. I would be glad to have the Senator further explain whether this large sum is intended to be appropriated in furtherance of the so-called policy of the concentration of the Army at a few central points in the country, with a view to providing special accommodations at such central points and finally abandoning the outlying Army posts now situated in dif-ferent sections of the country.

Mr. WARREN. So far as that is concerned, we have not included as much as the amount required and estimated for the several purposes and the brigade posts. Of course we have not cut the amount with the purpose of prohibiting expenditures at posts that may become brigade posts, but neither has any encouragement been given to the proposed erection of brigade posts

This appropriation can only be applied to such structures as cost less than $20,000 each, and the concentration and building of new posts or building new barracks, etc., must come through the sundry civil appropriation bill as to any large structures. Such appropriations are under the head of "Military posts" in that bill, and no part of this money can be used on any structure like company barracks or any structure of any kind that costs more than $20,000.

Mr. CARTER. Will the Senator kindly explain under what authority of law the process of concentration is now proceeding by the building up of central posts?

Mr. WARREN. In the absence of any direction by Congress the amount for military posts is appropriated in a lump sum, to be apportioned by the War Department.

Mr. CARTER. And that appropriation occurs, as I understand from the Senator's statement, in the sundry civil appropriation bill.

Mr. WARREN. It does. It is estimated differently. It is under a different head in the estimates.

Mr. CARTER. The amount appropriated last year was in the neighborhood of how much?

Mr. WARREN. About $1,200,000. It passed through the Senate at $1,400,000. It was cut in conference to, I think, $1,200,000, possibly $1,150,000.

Mr. CARTER. Then we have the assurance of the Senator that the increase in this item is in no sense related to the concentration proposition.

Mr. WARREN. It has no reference whatever to that subject.
Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Wyoming yield to the Senator from Texas?

Mr. WARREN. I do.

Mr. CULBERSON. I do not desire to take the Senator's me. I simply wanted in my own time to emphasize the suggestion of the Senator from Montana [Mr. Carters] to this re-markable increase as proposed on page 34 of the bill. I wish to emphasize that by stating, so that it may go in the Record, that the net increase of expenditures for the Army carried by this bill is $9,406,733.65. Of that increase $6,221,160 is said to be incident to the increase in the Artillery Corps. posing that to be true and taking it to be true, Mr. President, we have a net increase in other respects over last year of an amount in excess of $3,200,000. That is all I had to say.

Mr. WARREN. I did not hear the Senator's last remark.
Mr. CULBERSON. The last remark is that, outside of the increase in the Artillery Corps, this bill carries a net increase of something over $3,200,000; and I wanted to put that in the Record and let the country know what we are doing here with the public money.

Mr. WARREN. The Senator will notice that all that is in the Record. Every item is accounted for in the statement which accompanied the report upon this bill a few days since. A large portion of that, I will say, is an amount allowed on the House side as necessary to support the Army, but which was

Mr. CULBERSON. My understanding of the remarks of the Senator from Wyoming in charge of the bill was that this increase was due to the increase in the Artillery Corps. I wanted to call his attention to the fact, and I wanted to call the attention of the Senate and of the country to the fact, that we have an increased expenditure this year of over $3,200,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 34, after line 11, to insert:

For the acquisition of not exceeding 50 acres of land near or adjoining Fort Taylor, at Key West, Fla., $150,000, or so much thereof as the Secretary of War may deem necessary.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 34, after line 15, to insert:

The Secretary of War is hereby authorized to permit the Florida East Coast Rallway Company and its successors to make a fill and construct an embankment upon the submerged lands in front of the existing military reservation on which now stand the barracks and quarters of the military post at Key West, the said fill and embankment to used by said rallroad company and its assigns for rallroad purposes, subject to such conditions and restrictions as the Secretary of War may deem necessary in the public interest.

Mr. KEAN, Mr. President, I think an explanation of the two items from line 12 to line 24, on page 34, is necessary. It seems to me as though we first buy 50 acres of land for $150,000, and then give the Florida East Coast Railway Company a right of way through it.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, that was all brought out in the testimony before the committee and is in the hearings. It comes in this way: The railroad desires to build one hundred and odd miles of road down to the water at Key West. It is unable to do so unless it crosses for quite a distance land which is claimed to be owned by the United States. That land is partly submerged. The United States is not sure enough of its title either to grant it or to make any move regarding it without the specific authorization of Congress

As I understand it, we have down there two old posts, one for artillery and the other devoted to other purposes. One or both of them must be rebuilt. The railroad desires to go along down the foreshore to reach the proper point for a terminal. To do that renders the lower post uninhabitable. The War Department is desirous of the extension of this railroad and of the cheaper transportation which will thereby be afforded and the shorter time of traveling to reach points like Cuba, Panama, The War Department desires to obtain the 50 acres adjoining the upper of the two posts, in order that it may get the railroad in and use for warehouses the old buildings which now constitute the lower post and add what is necessary to the upper post for a garrison, etc., to take care of the employees who now have to walk a long distance between the two.

. Mr. KEAN. It seems to me that this is rather an extraordinary price to pay for 50 acres of land.
Mr. TALIAFERRO. Mr. President, I wish to say that there is no right of way given to this railroad company over any of the Government land; but, as the Senator from Wyoming has explained, the Florida East Coast Railway Company is now building down to Key West very largely over the ocean. Secretary of War, however, deemed it a wise and proper thing, for military reasons, to permit this railway company to fill in the foreshore of the present post property at Key West. So that any land they will occupy there at all will be of their own making.

The War Department has for a long time desired to change the post at Key West from its present location across the city near the fort. It is now distant about a mile and a quarter from the fort where the men have their duties to perform, Fort Taylor. The purpose of the purchase of this land is to enable the War Department to change the position of the post and put it nearer to Fort Taylor; and rather than dispose of the land that the Government owns now at Key West and has been using heretofore the Secretary of War recommended that it be held for storage purposes. That is the condition of the case. The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment proposed by the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Military Affairs was, in the item of appropriation for transportation of the Army, etc., on page 36, line 5, after the word "ferriages," to strike out the semicolon and the word "hereafter;" so as to read:

Of ordnance, ordnance stores, and small arms from the foundries and armorles to the arsenals, fortifications, frontier posts, and Army depots; freights, wharfage, tolls, and ferriages.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 36, line 6, before the word "estimates," to insert "That;" and in the same line, after the word "estimates," to insert "for the next fiscal year;" so as to make the proviso read:

Provided, That estimates for the next fiscal year shall be submitted to the Congress of the United States covering transportation of the Army and its supplies in one estimate, and additional estimates shall be submitted covering other items heretofore carried in appropriation bills under the head of "Transportation of the Army and its supplies,

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I was diverted for a moment, and I now ask to turn back to page 35, line 19. After the word "enlistment," in that line, I move to insert what I send to the desk

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated. The Secretary. On page 35, line 19, after the word "enlistment," it is proposed to insert:

Provided further, That hereafter any military prison that the Secretary of War may designate for the confinement of general prisoners for whom there is no room at the United States military prison at Fort Leavenworth, or when it is impracticable to send there, shall be regarded as a branch of the said United States military prison and, equally with it, shall be subject to the laws relating thereto, including chapter 6, Title XIV of the Revised Statutes.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WARREN. Now, Mr. President, turning back to page 17; line 11, after the word "had," in the committee amendment already adopted, I move to insert the words "in all.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment of the committee, to which the Senator from Wyoming has offered his amendment, has already been agreed to; but if there be no objection it will be regarded as open, and the question is on the amendment of the Senator from Wyoming to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Military Affairs was, on page 38, line 13, after the word "service," to strike out "$13,500,000" and insert "$15,163,792.72;" so as to read:

Provided further, That the number of draft animals purchased from this appropriation, added to those now on hand, shall be limited to such numbers as are actually required for the service, $15,163,792.72.

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President, I invite the attention of the Senator from Wyoming to this extraordinary increase of about $2,000,000 in this item, and I ask him to give some explanation of it.

Mr. WARREN. That is made necessary by the increase of the artillery branch, which will ultimately add about 6,000 men to the Army. I want to say further that that amount will be a great deal larger unless we shall provide such legislation as this bill proposes as to transportation.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Military Affairs was, on page 38, line 24, after the word "governments," to insert "officers of the War Department, Members of Congress, other officers of the Government while traveling on official business;" on page 39, line 3, after the word "transported," to strike out the colon and insert a comma and the words "and when accommodations are available, transportation may be provided for general passengers to the island of Guam, rates and regulations therefor to be prescribed by the Secretary of War;" so as to make the proviso read:

Provided, That no part of this appropriation shall be applied to the payment of the expenses of using transports in any other Government work than the transportation of the Army, its supplies and employees; and when, in the opinion of the Secretary of War, accommodations are available, transportation may be provided for the officers, enlisted men, employees, and supplies of the Navy, the Marine Corps, and for members and employees of the Philippine and Hawalian governments, officers of the War Department, Members of Congress, other officers of the Government while traveling on official business, and without expense to the United States, for the families of those persons herein authorized to be transported, and when accommodations are available, transportation may be provided for general passengers to the island of Guam, rates and regulations therefor to be prescribed by the Secretary of War.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, I very seriously doubt the propriety of our attempting on this bill to legislate in regard to amending the rate bill that we spent a good, large part of the last session of Congress in efforts to perfect.

Mr. WARREN. This has nothing to do with the rate bill. It pertains to the subject of transportation across the ocean.

Mr. BACON. I beg the Senator's pardon. I had the wrong age. I withdraw the suggestion, Mr. President. The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The Secretary. The next amendment of the Committee on Military Affairs is, on page 39, after line 9, to insert the fol-

Provided further, That nothing in the act of Congress entitled "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act to regulate commerce,' approved February 4, 1887, and all acts amendatory thereof, and to enlarge the powers of the Interstate Commerce Commission," approved June 29, 1906, shall be held to prohibit the allowance of reduced rates to the Government for the transportation of persons or property, or to prohibit the transportation of officers and enlisted men in the service of the United States free or at reduced rates.

Mr. BACON. Now, Mr. President, I ask the Secretary to pause at that part of the amendment, because it is to that part that my first remarks were addressed.

Mr. WARREN. That is a distinct amendment of itself.

Mr. BACON. It is a distinct amendment, although it is only separated by a semicolon from that which follows. It is entirely distinct, and the objection to it would not apply to the remaining part.

I was about to say, Mr. President, that I doubted very much the propriety of the policy of endeavoring to legislate upon an appropriation bill to secure whatever amendments may be required in regard to the provisions of the rate bill, which we at so much cost of time and trouble of various kinds endeavored to perfect at the last session.

Mr. WARREN. If the Senator will permit me right there, I will say that this is a matter which ought to have been considered when the rate bill was up, but it was overlooked. amendment is designed to correct a great inequality in railroad rates that we have to meet in the Government service. I do not know but what it is a greater inequality than has existed at any time under the cut rates of the railroads, so much complained of before the passage of restrictive legislation.

For instance, there are fifty-six railroads in the United States which by law are hauling the property and men of the Army, at 50 cents on the dollar of their regular rates. There are fortyfour more at least, possibly more than that, which heretofore have always entered into an agreement to accept 50 cents on the dollar, the same as is paid to the land-grant or bond-aided railroads. There are other railroads which have paid their entire indebtedness to the Government, although they formerly were aided by bonds and land grants, and they are getting 100 cents on the dollar.

So we have here a case of inequality, where one railroad gets a dollar for what another railroad gets 50 cents. The amendment is to make provision for the railroads, if they desire to do as they did before. Those who are not bound to the Government to haul army freight and men at 50 cents on the dollar can nevertheless do so, and thereby be put in direct competition with the others. As it is now, if we want to send men or property over the most direct route, we find that we must pay a dollar, instead of paying 50 cents, and we have to go by some tortuous route and spend days and weeks in crossing the continent to avoid paying 100 cents on the dollar, which, under the rate bill, we have forced the railroads to charge.

Mr. BACON. That is only a part, in the first place, of the

Mr. BACON. That is only a part, in the first place, of the provision included in this particular amendment—that is, I mean the particular part of it.

Mr. WARREN. That is true, but I wish to bring that particular part up now, so that the Senator may have it in mind.

Mr. BACON. I did not, as the Senator will remember, say anything on the question of the propriety of the amendment—

Mr. WARREN. I understand. Mr. BACON. I simply am addressing myself to the proposition that the rate law ought not to be amended in this way.

We have been in session here since the first of December. These difficulties were known, and I respectfully suggest there ought to have been an amendment directed to the rate bill which should have gone to the proper committee and should have had consideration by the Senate as an amendment to the rate bill, because this is not the only provision of the rate

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President-

Mr. BACON. I hope the Senator will pardon me just a sec-This is not the only provision of the rate bill where there are defects which have been pointed out and concerning which amendments are very urgently desired by different people who are affected by them. For instance, the newspapers are knocking here very strenuously, asking that we amend the bill in a particular which they say in its present form does them a great injustice; and there are a great many others.

I confess that the principal point to which my attention was directed was not so much the question that the Senator from Wyoming has commented upon as the effort to go into that phase of the rate bill which gave us so much trouble, to wit, the question of free passes.

Mr. WARREN. I will say to the Senator that I am perfectly willing to cut those two words out, if he desires.

Mr. BACON. I want to say in that connection— Mr. WARREN. I am perfectly willing to do that. Mr. BACON. I hope the Senator will pardon me just a moment. I am not going to take much time. I want to say in that connection that I have no disposition whatever to deny to the officers and men of the Army any proper indulgence or privilege, and as the general disposition seems to be to increase the compensation of the officials of the Government and the employees of these great corporations, I would be perfectly willing to have some proper addition made to the compensation of the officers and enlisted men of the Army. But I think it ex-tremely improper, Mr. President, that we should endeavor in this piecemeal way to amend the rate bill.

I think the rate bill has a great many good features in it, and I think a great many people have had to make sacrifices in order to get the benefit of what may come for the general good. Whenever the time comes to find out where there has been a mistake made and where there is a grievance here and a burden there which ought to be relieved or corrected, I want to see that done in a methodical way and with proper consideration with reference to that single matter, and not by its being grafted upon a bill where we can not give it proper investigation and consideration.

I do not want to be put in a position, Mr. President, of opposing the special feature of granting to the officers and enlisted men of the Army the privilege of reduced rates or of free passes, and I regret very much to say anything about it. only with a view to having some more considerate action than can possibly be had with reference to the amendment of the rate bill that I make any suggestion whatever.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President—
The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from North Dakota?

I do. Mr. BACON.

Mr. McCUMBER. I thought the Senator had completed his

Mr. BACON. No. I will say this, Mr. President, that if the amendment is to be retained for the purpose which the Senator from Wyoming indicates as an important one-and certainly his statement has a very great deal of value in it—I would not my-self be willing to do more than ask that the word "free" be taken out, because if it is going to relate to the transportation of troops I think possibly the question of reduced rates could properly be left in an amendment, if we are going to deal with it at all; but I do not think we ought on this bill to deal with the question of free transportation.

Mr. McCUMBER obtained the floor.

Mr. WARREN. Will the Senator allow me a moment?

Mr. McCUMBER. Certainly.

WARREN. Mr. President, replying to the observation that this defect should have been known before and should have been handled in a different way, I will say it was presumed that a rate could be made for the officers and men of the Army if all of the roads made the same rate and agreed upon the same terms; but as the railroad rate law is dissected, understood, and construed by the Interstate Commerce Commission and the railroads we are confronted now, without time to change it in any other way, by a condition like this:

We have had our estimates based upon the usual cost of transportation. We have inserted in this bill the usual amount, plus what the growth of the Army calls for. Now, if we shall fail by legislation here providing for this expenditure to arrange for these rates as to the Army in general the appropriation will be entirely inadequate. As I said before, we are paying now, for instance, to the Union Pacific system a hundred cents on the dollar

Mr. BACON. I recognize what the Senator has said in that regard

Mr. WARREN. Now, as to the officers and their families. Since I have known anything about the Army, on the western roads at least they have always received the courtesy of half fare, and sometimes probably a lower rate than that.

Mr. BACON. I would suggest, if the Senator will pardon

Mr. WARREN. It bears very heavily, especially upon men with families, and particularly when they have to cross from posts on the Atlantic to those on the Pacific, and then perhaps to the Philippines, to be compelled to pay full fare.

Then, again, in the case of a train load of soldiers, embarked all together, the railroad knows just how many cars will be necessary and just how much power will be required to haul that train, and there is no need for stopping anywhere, except for railroad necessities—for water, fuel, etc. Therefore, there has always been-it is a part of the economics of this countrya special rate to the Government for handling troops all over the country

Mr. BACON. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a ques-Did the Senator understand me to say that I would not ask that we do more than strike out the word "free," which would allow the reduced rates for which the Senator is now

Mr. WARREN. I am perfectly willing to accept that.

Mr. BACON. I want to make one other suggestion to the Senator in connection with the remarks he has just made. From the reading I have been able to give it, there is no provision in regard to reduced rates for the families of officers. I think that is more important than reduced rates for the officers themselves, because the officers have travel pay, but their families do not, and frequently they have to carry their families along with them. So I think it is more important to insert the words "and their families."

Mr. WARREN. It was intended to cover that. If the provision does not do so, we will offer an amendment to that effect. I thank the Senator for bringing it to my attention.

Mr. BACON. I would suggest to the Senator, on line 19, page 39, to strike out the words "free or" and insert "and their families." Then it would read-

Officers and enlisted men in the service of the United States and their

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment to the amendment

The Secretary. On page 39, line 19, in the amendment proposed by the committee, after the words "United States," it is proposed to strike out the words "free or" and insert in lieu thereof the words "and their families."

Mr. WARREN. I think that amendment had better be made. Mr. BACON. Yes.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, the amendment to the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. McCUMBER. I want to ask the Senator in charge of the bill a question, to see if we can get a basis for reasoning out whether or not this provision ought to remain. I want to ask the Senator if provision is not made for the payment of the traveling expenses of every officer or soldier traveling on duty? Does not the Government pay the traveling expenses?

Mr. WARREN. The Government pays the traveling expenses of an officer when he is traveling under orders. The Government takes no cognizance whatever of the family. In other words, the Army is laid out on lines which ignore the family entirely. So that all the traveling expenses of members of the family must be paid for, and if the officer is on leave or if he is moving except under orders, of course he is moving at his own expense.

Mr. McCUMBER. I understand that, Mr. President. I want to say just a word in reference to this whole Army appropriation bill and the Army system. I am as much in favor as any Senator here of paying officers of the Army proper compensation and paying proper compensation to the railroads for moving them. We have a system that is applied to the Army that is not applied in any other branches of the Government. We have sought not only by direct legislation, but by every species of indirect legislation to help out the salaries of Army officers. We start in, for instance, fixing the salary from the majorgenerals down.

It appears upon the record, one at $11,000, one at $9,000, one at $8,000, one at $7,000, etc. Yet every Senator who knows anything about it knows that practically every one of those officers is drawing more than the salary named, because, after the expiration of every five years of service, there is 10 per cent added to the salary.

The Senator is in error.

WARREN. The Senator is one error.

Mr. WARREN. The Senator is in error. Mr. McCUMBER. After five years more another 10 per cent is added.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President-

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Wyoming?

Mr. McCUMBER. I yield. Mr. WARREN. I know the Senator does not wish to be in

Mr. McCumber. I certainly do not.
Mr. Warren. Speaking of the general officers, there is no percentage allowance. There is a maximum. The maximum for a brigadier-general is $5,500, and $7,500 for a major-general. To that is added commutation of quarters, provided he is on duty where the Government has no barracks or quarters for himfor instance, in the city of Washington. And that is all.

Mr. McCUMBER. On every page of the bill we find for these officers additional pay for length of service.

Mr. WARREN. Yes; that applies—— Mr. McCUMBER. Again, "additional pay for length of serv-That appears at the end of every one of these subdivisions

Mr. WARREN. That applies only to officers in the lower In fact, for colonels and lieutenant-colonels there is a Below they are allowed certain percentages which maximum. arrive at the maximum when they amount in all, after twenty years' service, to 40 per cent.

Mr. McCUMBER. I understand it applies to those of the lower ranks. It does apply to the officials, however. So if I write to the Department to ascertain the salary of any official I am unable to get it unless they go further and ascertain his length of service.

Then, in addition to that, there are certain allowances made for traveling expenses which are not allowed in other cases.

Mr. WARREN. No, Mr. President. Mr. McCUMBER. Let me finish the sentence. There are other allowances for rooms, etc. So if an officer is sent from one section of the country to Washington to live he does not have to pay rent, because the amount that is allowed, if he is on official duty, is sufficient to pay the rent. We can find many other ways in which special privileges are constantly growing up in favor of the Army and which are not conferred upon other branches of the Government.

Now, that may be all right; it may be justified; but, so far as I am concerned, I would sooner appropriate directly for each one what he is entitled to and make his salary accordingly than to say that his salary shall be five thousand and that there shall be something for additional length of service, and if he is allowed to go any place where it is necessary to hire rooms, then he should have those, and the Government should pay for them. I have no objection to that.

But we labored here last year, and labored strenuously, for the purpose of passing a law that would give a square deal to everyone in the matter of travel service. We declared that no person should have any special privileges. I believed then that a year would not elapse before there would be an attempt to secure special privileges for some members either of the Army or the Navy or some other branch of the Government—some of the officials. The very first step that was taken was to appropriate immediately $25,000 for the traveling expenses of the President. We passed that. Now it is proposed to go further, and while we have cut off every other official of the Government, no matter what his rank, we find in this bill a provision that will allow the railroads to carry an officer of the Army with his family free anywhere over the United States. Of course if he is on official business, he would get his transportation.

Mr. DANIEL. Mr. President-

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Virginia?

Mr. McCUMBER. Certainly.

Mr. McCUMBER. Certainly.

Mr. DANIEL. Ought not the private to be given privileges of the same sort? He gets lower pay.

Mr. McCUMBER. The private ought to have the same privilege that the officer is given, but neither the private nor the officer ought to have the privilege unless it is granted to every other American citizen. That is the objection I have to this amendment.

Mr. WARREN. The condition of the amendment now under consideration is such that there will be no free transportation.

It applies alike to officers and enlisted men.

Mr. McCUMBER. And not only that, but his property can be carried free.

Mr. WARREN. The property of the United States at reduced rates only?

Mr. McCUMBER. No; the property of the officers.

Mr. WARREN. Not at all.
Mr. McCUMBER. That is as I read it.

Mr. WARREN. If the Senator will permit me, perhaps he did not hear what I said earlier during this discussion. Instead of making inequalities, the amendment makes an equality between the railroads.

Mr. McCUMBER. How is that?

Mr. WARREN. Instead of making inequalities, it makes an equality between the railroads, so that all railroads may fare alike.

Mr. McCUMBER. I do not quite understand what the Senator means by that. Will he explain it?

Mr. WARREN. I stated before—perhaps the Senator did not hear it-that there are fifty-six or more railroads in the United States which, under the statutes, are hauling for the Government, we will say, at 50 per cent of the regular rate.

Mr. McCUMBER. Under what statutes? Mr. WARREN. Under existing statutes.

Mr. McCUMBER. How can they haul for a less sum than the regular rate under the law we passed last year?

Mr. WARREN. Congress did not repeal the land-grant laws. Mr. McCUMBER. That is what I want the Senator to explain.

Mr. WARREN. They are land-grant or bond-aided railroads.

In addition to that-

Mr. McCUMBER. They have had their consideration in the land grant for the service that they give.

Mr. WARREN. I grant you that.

Mr. McCUMBER. Then they can not complain.

Mr. WARREN. They are not complaining.

We have another lot of railroads tied up by the rate bill, which, for hauling the same troops from the same point to the same destination, get a hundred cents.

Mr. McCUMBER. All right.

Mr. WARREN. They are willing to do it, as they have done heretofore, at 50 per cent for the Government, and make a rate equal to that of the other roads, so that the Government may send its forces over that railroad which is most convenient to it, and pay the same rate to all.

Mr. McCUMBER. The railways may be willing to give this extra privilege to the officers, etc., but some one has to pay for it in the end, and for the same reason that it was argued last year, that if there was free transportation over the railroads of the United States to certain persons, the railroads would have to charge the others who pay for their transportation an amount which would equal their loss on the free transportation. So if the railways are allowed to give this preferential rate to the Government, they will have to make it out of some one else, and the general traveling public will have to pay for it in the end.

My position is that the Government has no right to ask in the transportation of its forces for anything that the citizen has not a right to ask; that the Government should pay exactly the same rate for transportation that it compels the citizen to pay; that the Government should have no special advantage.

Mr. HEYBURN. I should like to call attention to the fact that as I read this amendment it would permit free transportation, or transportation at special rates, to Government employees in any branch of the service. It is not limited to the Army and the Navy. After reciting the restrictions of the interstatecommerce act, it reads-

Mr. WARREN. It says "officers and enlisted men in the service of the United States."

Mr. HEYBURN. I call the attention of the Senator to this

That nothing in the act * * * shall be held to prohibit the allowance of reduced rates to the Government for the transportation of persons or property.

The Government can secure transportation for its employees in any department of the Government under that provision if you stop there. But it says:

Or to prohibit the transportation of officers and enlisted men in the service of the United States—

And as we have amended it-and their families-

free or at reduced rates.

Under that the Government could have transported, irrespective of the interstate-commerce act, any employee in any Department of the Government of the United States.

Mr. LODGE. Will the Senator from Idaho allow me?

Mr. HEYBURN. Certainly.
Mr. LODGE. "Officers and enlisted men" is a technical term that always alludes either to the Army or the Navy. There is no question about it in this connection.

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President—
The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Texas?
Mr. McCUMBER. Certainly.
Mr. HEYBURN. I desire to finish the reply to the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. CULBERSON. Very well. Mr. HEYBURN. I think if the Senator from Massachusetts will inspect the language of this proposed amendment as it is printed and punctuated, it will be obvious to him that the first clause of this declaration would permit the transportation of others than officers, because the amendment uses the word "persons."

Mr. McCUMBER. I think the Senator from Idaho is absolutely correct in his construction.

Mr. CULBERSON. I desire to suggest to the Senator from North Dakota that it is manifest we can not pass this important amendment to the rate bill in the absence of a quorum, if it ought to be passed at all.

Mr. McCUMBER. I was going to say in closing, without making any further argument upon it, that I raise the point of order that the amendment proposes general legislation and is not provided for in the estimates.

Mr. WARREN. Will not the Senator recall his point of order?

Mr. McCUMBER. I withhold it.

Mr. WARREN. I ask that the amendment may be passed over until to-morrow.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be passed over. ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. DANIEL. I move that the Senate adjourn. Mr. McCUMBER. Will the Senator from Virginia yield to me for a moment?

Mr. DANIEL Certainly.

Mr. McCUMBER. I understand there is nothing but this bill which will probably be up for consideration to-morrow. We have from six to eight hundred pension bills on the Calendar. I also understand that notice has been given that there will be memorial exercises here to-morrow afternoon at 4 o'clock. therefore ask unanimous consent that after the completion of this bill to-morrow the Senate proceed to the consideration of unobjected pension bills on the Calendar and unobjected bills for the correction of military records.

Mr. WARREN. I did not hear the proposition

Mr. LODGE. It is a request for the consideration of pension bills after the conclusion of the Army bill.

Mr. WARREN. To-night?
Mr. LODGE. No; to-morrow.
Mr. McCUMBER. To-morrow.
Mr. CULBERSON. I simply rise to suggest to the Senator from North Dakota that there are a number of unobjected bills on the Calendar besides pension bills. I do not see why we

Mr. McCUMBER. I should like to have the Senate go to the Pension Calendar, and when we get through with them there will be time for the other bills, probably.

Mr. CULBERSON. Very well; with that understanding, I have no objection to the request.

Mr. NELSON. I desire to say that to-morrow, at the close of the morning business, when the Army appropriation bill shall have been disposed of, I desire to again call up the bill relating to the right of appeals in criminal cases. It is a matter of great importance and of national concern, and on that account I feel that I can not agree to the request for unanimous consent. We are now getting into the last part of the session. is to receive any consideration, it ought to be taken up at as early a day as practicable. The pension bills can be taken up at any time.

Mr. McCUMBER. I am afraid the Senator from Minnesota will have some trouble in holding a quorum here to-morrow upon that bill, and if it is a question which shall be considered, and as I have asked unanimous consent, I give notice that after the completion of the Army appropriation bill to-morrow I will move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the unobjected pension bills upon the Calendar.

Mr. NELSON. I also give notice that I will move to-morrow at the close of the morning business, unless the Army appropria-tion bill interferes, to take up for consideration the bill giving the Government the right of appeal in criminal cases.

Mr. PILES. I have a little bill here providing for a railroad

Mr. FILES. I have a little bill here providing for a rambour right of way through a military reservation, and I should like very much to have it considered.

Mr. WARREN. Will not the Senator from Washington wait until we can complete the reading of the Army appropriation bill? I think we ought to proceed that far to-night.

I supposed that had been done.

Mr. WARREN. It has not been.

Mr. PILES. I beg the Senator's pardon.

Mr. WARREN. I wish to say now, while notices are being given, that I take it for granted none of them will interfere with the consideration of the Army appropriation bill.

I take this opportunity to say that the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. Berry] desires me to announce that he wishes to address the Senate upon a subject, and that he has been compelled to put it over from day to day, and he desired me to give notice that on Monday morning, immediately after the routine busi-ness, he would seek the floor to address the Senate upon the subject of which he has given previous notice.

Mr. President-

Mr. KEAN. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock and 48 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Saturday, February 9, 1907, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

Friday, February 8, 1907.

The House was called to order at 12 m. by Mr. DALZELL, who directed the reading of the following communication from the Speaker.

The Clerk read as follows:

THE M'CUMBER PENSION LAW.

Mr. CHARLES B. LANDIS. Mr. Speaker, I present the following privileged resolution.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Indiana presents the following privileged resolution, which the Clerk will

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That there be printed, for distribution through the document room of the House of Representatives, 20,000 copies of public law No. 63, known as the "McCumber pension law."

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Is that to go out in this document room here?

Mr. CHARLES B. LANDIS. It does, Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Then I object.

Mr. CHARLES B. LANDIS. I will say to the gentleman from Missouri that this is a provision for 20,000 copies of what is known as the "McCumber pension law." It is a mere leaflet; it will cost about $1.25 a thousand, and if they are placed in the folding room of the House instead of the document room, it would entail more cost in bookkeeping than will be entailed in printing the document.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Do they not have to keep books out there, the same as in the folding room?

Mr. CHARLES B. LANDIS. No.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. What do they do, then?

Mr. CHARLES B. LANDIS. Not to the same extent, at any rate. These 20,000 leaflets will be placed in the document room, and anyone who wants can secure them, and if there are not enough to go around we can have more of them printed.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I know; but some fellow who wants to electioneer with them will get 10,000 and leave the rest of us when we want them so that we can not get them to send to our constituents.

Mr. CHARLES B. LANDIS. I will say upon investigation that that position is not well taken, and that Members are not permitted to abuse their privilege in that respect.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I know the fact to be that one man introduced a bill here of a great deal of consequence, and somebody went out there and got every copy of the bill, and we had to have it reprinted.

Mr. CHARLES B. LANDIS. There are only about 400 copies of a bill placed in the document room.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. If there is any way to stop this, I want to do it.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will state to the generator from Missouri that the resolution is privileged. The tleman from Missouri that the resolution is privileged. question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The question being taken, on a division (demanded by Mr. Clark of Missouri) there were—ayes 74, noes 33.

Accordingly the resolution was agreed to.

BRIDGE ACROSS MISSOURI RIVER, YANKTON, S. DAK.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 6872) to amend an act entitled "An act authorizing the Winnipeg, Yankton and Gulf Railroad Company to construct a combined railroad, wagon, and foot-passenger bridge across the Missouri River at or near the city of Yankton, S. Dak."

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 6 of an act authorizing the Winnipeg, Yankton and Gulf Railroad Company to construct a combined, railroad, wagon, and foot-passenger bridge across the Missouri River at or near the city of Yankton, S. Dak., approved April 5, 1904, as amended by the act approved February 5, 1906, be, and the same is hereby, so amended that the time within which the said bridge is required to be commenced shall be within one year, and the time within which it is required that said bridge shall be completed shall be within three years from the date of the approval of this act.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

The motion was agreed to.

MASTERS, MATES, ENGINEERS, AND PILOTS.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 21204) to amend section 4446 of the Revised Statutes, relating to licensed masters, mates, engineers, and pilots.

The bill was read, as follows:

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 4446 of the Revised Statutes, as the same is now in force and effect, be, and the same is hereby, amended so as to read as follows:

"Sec. 4446. Every master, mate, engineer, and pilot who shall receive a license shall, when employed upon any vessel, place his certificate of license, which shall be framed under glass, in some conspicuous place in such vessel, where it can be seen by passengers and others at all times; and for every neglect to comply with this provision by any such master, mate, engineer, or pilot, he shall be subject to a fine of $100, or to the revocation of his license: Provided, That any pilot, quartermaster, mate, or engineer in the employment of any ferry company or line, and complying with the foregoing provisions with regard to the ferryboat of such company or line upon which he is regularly employed, shall be authorized to act temporarily as such pilot, quartermaster, mate, or engineer upon any other ferryboat of the company by or line upon which he is employed."

With the following amendments recommended by the com-

With the following amendments recommended by the committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries:

Page 1, line 8, insert after the comma following the word "vessel" the words "within forty-eight hours after going on duty."

Page 1, line 10, after the semicolon following the word "times," insert the words "Provided, That in case of emergency such officer may be transferred to another vessel of the same owners for a period not exceeding forty-eight hours without the transfer of his license to such other vessel." other vessel."
Page 2 strike out all of lines from 1 to 7, inclusive.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill? There was no objection.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill, as amended, was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. Grosvenor, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

LAND IN ST. AUGUSTINE, FLA.

The SPEAKER pro tempore laid before the House the bill (S. 1726) making provision for conveying in fee the piece or strip of ground in St. Augustine, Fla., known as "The Lines," for school purposes, with a House amendment disagreed to by the Senate and a conference requested.

Mr. HULL. I move that the House insist on its amendment and agree to the conference asked for by the Senate.

The motion was agreed to; and the Speaker pro tempore appointed as conferees on the part of the House Mr. Young, Mr. CAPRON, and Mr. SLAYDEN.

PENSION BILLS.

This bill proposes to pension the beneficiary named therein at $12 per month.

William Marland, the officer named in the bill, served as a sergeant in Company F, Sixth Massachusetts Infantry, from April 15, 1861, to August 2, 1861, and as second and first lieutenant and captain of the Second Battery, Massachusetts Light Artillery, from December 24, 1861, to August 11, 1865, when honorably discharged.

He was a pensioner under the act of June 27, 1890, for total inability to earn a support by manual labor, and died April 17, 1905.

The beneficiary named in the bill, now 56 years of age, who married the officer on October 20, 1870, applied for pension under the amended act of June 27, 1890. Her claim was rejected in April, 1906, upon the ground of nondependence, she having a net annual income in excess of $250.

There has been filed with the committee the affidavit of Lieut, R. B. Hall, of the officer's battery, to the effect that the battery had an unusually long service with the Army of the Gulf and was stationed near the Mississippi River; that nearly everyone in the battery became ill of malaria; and medical and lay testimony that claimant's husband ever since 1869 had been a severe sufferer from malaria contracted during this service above named; that this trouble resulted in rheumatism, diabetes, and fatty degeneration of the heart, and that he finally died of that disease.

It is also shown that the officer was often urged to apply for pension under the general law, but abstained from doing so owing to the fact that the battery had no surgeon and that the physicians who treated him up to 1890 had died.

It is further shown that the beneficiary, since the rejection of her claim in the Pension Bureau, has been compelled to sell her property in order to pay debts contracted previous to the death of her husband. In the opinion of your committee it is clear, from the evidence filed, that the officer's death was a result of his

NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the purpose of further considering the naval appropriation bill, and pending that motion I ask unanimous consent that we may continue general debate for to-day without fixing any limitation as to time, one half of the time to be controlled by the gentleman from Louisiana and the other half by myself.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that one half the time to-day in general debate be controlled by himself and the other half by the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. MEYER].

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I will not object to that if the further condition is added to it that only one hour shall be yielded to a Member, and that the time is to be extended only by unanimous consent of the committee.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Speaker, I could not hear all that was said, and I want to understand the conditions or provisions for general debate.

Mr. FOSS. We do not undertake to limit it at the present

Mr. SLAYDEN. Do you limit it to to-day?

Mr. FOSS. No; to continue to-day in general debate, onehalf to be controlled by the gentleman from Louisiana and onehalf by myself.

Mr. SLAYDEN. I would like to ask the gentleman if it would not be possible to limit the time consumed in general debate and to give Members who speak permission to print remarks in the Record, limiting it to those who speak on the bill?

Mr. FOSS. I have no objection to that, Mr. Speaker. The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent that leave to print for those who speak on the bill be granted-

Mr. PAYNE. For five legislative days.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. For five legislative days. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hear none. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois as modified by the gentleman from New York. [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, was the request as to unanimous consent as to the division of time put to the House?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Yes. The Chair put the request with the modification of the gentleman from New York, and there was no objection.

The motion of Mr. Foss was then agreed to: accordingly the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the naval appropriation bill, with Mr. Sherman in the chair.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. Gaines of West Virginia having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate, by Mr. Parkinson, its reading clerk, announced that the Senate had passed the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Secretary be directed to request the House of Representatives to return to the Senate the bill (S. 7495) to define the status of certain patents and pending entries, selections, and filings on lands formerly within the Fort Berthold Indian Reservation, in North Dakota.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bills of the following titles:

H. R. 24473. An act to define the status of certain patents and pending entries, selections, and filings on lands formerly within the Fort Berthold Indian Reservation, in North Dakota; and

H. R. 23578. An act to authorize the county of Clay, State of Arkansas, to construct a bridge across Black River at or near Bennetts Ferry, in said county and State.

NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Chairman and gentleman of the committee, I desire to say a few words in reference to this bill which is now before the committee, and I shall speak at this time only in a general way and point out some of the general characteristics of this bill. In the first place, this appropriation bill carries $95,426,325.54. The estimates which were sent to the committee from the Navy Department amounted in all to $115,431,000, so that this bill shows a reduction from the estimate of over $20,000,000. It is the smallest bill which has been presented to this committee in the last few years. Last year we presented to the committee a naval bill amounting to $99,734,000. The year before that the bill as presented to the committee amounted to over $100,000,000, and the year before that, over $96,000,000. This bill carries approximately ninety-five and a half millions of dollars. It is therefore a modest appropriation bill.

Now, with regard to the bill, allow me to say that we make provision for the Marine Corps. The Marine Corps is composed of about 278 officers and a little less than 9,000 men. The appropriations for the maintenance of the Marine Corps in this bill amounts to $5,621,000. If we subtract this from the total amount of the bill, we have $89,804,000, which is the appropriation for the Navy proper. Of this $89,804,000, $23,460,000 is for the increase of the Navy, the appropriation made necessary to finish the ships which have been authorized and now are in process of construction. If we subtract this amount of twentythree million and a half, we have left $66,340,000, and if from that we take $4,700,000, which is the amount of new construction of public works in our navy-yards and stations, then we arrive at the sum of $61,640,000, which might properly be called the sum necessary for the maintenance of the Navy as it stands to-day—not a very large amount. So much for the amount carried in the appropriation bill.

I wish now to say to the committee that we have placed upon this bill matters which might properly be considered new legislation, and in order that the committee may fully understand what is in the bill I shall speak of the important provisions of this character in the bill. In the first place, we have a provision here relating to officers of the Navy above the grade of captain who served with credit in the regular volunteer forces during the civil war prior to April 9, 1865. This provision gives about fifteen rear-admirals who served during the civil war the three-fourths pay of the Navy as it is now paid. These rear-admirals retired before the personnel bill went into effect, and prior to that time the pay of the rear-admiral was $6,000 a year. When they went upon the retired list, they received three-fourths of that pay, but since then the Army pay table has been applied to the Navy, and-now these officers think they are entitled, as other officers upon the retired list, to three-fourths of the Army pay—that is to say, three-fourths of $7,500. This will cost the Government in the neighborhood of $20,000.

The following is a statement prepared by an officer affected by this provision:

The Navy personnel bill approved March 3, 1899, and which became effective on June 30, 1899, contained a clause which had never been considered by the framers of the bill—a special board in the Navy Department, of which Assistant Secretary of the Navy, Mr. Theodore Roosevelt, was president, the Secretary of the Navy (who approved and sent it to both Houses of Congress), neither of committees of the Senate and House of Representatives, or in the Senate or House. The bill passed the House just as it was received from the Navy Department. The Senate amended and passed it.

When the bill was in conference there was inserted the clause above referred to, which was about as follows:

"Provided, That nothing in this act shall have the effect of either increasing or decreasing the pay of officers now on the retired list."

To correct the unintentional discrimination against those rear-admirals who had been retired previous to June 30, 1899, all of whom had served as commanding officers of ships during the civil war, and many of whom had been advanced in their grade for "faithful and meritorious services," or promoted to the next higher grade for their services during that war, the Senate passed as an amendment (No. 6) to the naval appropriation bill for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1907, which was clearly intended to correct the great and humiliating injustice which the old retired rear-admirals considered had been done them.

After several conferences between the two committees on Naval Affairs.

After several conferences between the two committees on Naval Affairs, r. Hull, chairman of the Military Committee of the House, proposed at the existing Army retiring law should apply to the Navy. This is adopted by the House and Senate and became the law. It is as was adopted by the House and Senate and became the law, it is as follows:

"That any officer of the Navy not above the grade of captain who served with credit as an officer or as an enlisted man in the regular or volunteer forces during the civil war prior to April 9, 1865, otherwise than as a cadet, and whose name is borne on the Official Register of the Navy, and who has heretofore been, or may hereafter be, retired on account of wounds or disability incident to the service or on account of age or after forty years' service, may, in the discretion of the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, be placed on the rettred list of the Navy with the rank and retired pay of one grade above that actually held by him at the time of retirement: Provided, That this act shall not apply to any officer who received an advance of grade at or since the date of his retirement or who has been restored to the Navy and placed on the retired list by virtue of the provisions of a special act of Congress."

The Army retiring law, as is now that of the Navy, makes no provisions for officers above the rank of colonels, and consequently for captains in the Navy, who have the assimulated rank of colonels in the Army, and the result is that the old retired rear-admirals were again discriminated against. I have been informed that Mr. HULL, said that he was not aware of this discrimination at the time he advocated the adoption of the Army retiring law as a substitute for the amendment passed by the Senate.

The Navy personnel bill of 1899, prepared in the Navy Department and as it was reported by both Naval Committees and was passed by both Houses of Congress, provided that officers of the Navy should receive the same pay as officers of the Army with whom they held assimulated rank.

The fifteen rear-admirals who were retired prior to June 30, 1899, now ask Congress that they now in their declining years may be reassimulated rank.

The fifteen rear-admirals who were retired prior to June 30, 1899, now ask Congress that they now in their declining years may be relieved from the unmerited humiliation they have suffered by the passage of a bill for their relief, which has been introduced in the Senate and House and which are now before the two Naval Committees for their consideration. This is an act of justice to the men who commanded ships during the civil war and who as commanding officers of ships took part in the naval victories of that war, and since the war have commanded ships and squadrons and have filled other important positions.

The fifteen retired rear-admirals who ask for relief from their humiliating position were retired with the assimulated rank of majorgeneral. A great many of the retired rear-admirals who have been placed on the retired list since June 30, 1899, held the assimulated rank of major-general and draw the pay of retired major-generals, while the fifteen rear-admirals who were discriminated against get about 20 per cent less pay than they do, and since the war have commanded vessels and squadrons and have filled other important positions of responsibility.

Then again, many of them either served as subordinate officers under the old rear-admirals during the civil war or saw no services in that war because they had not then graduated from the Naval Academy.

that war because they had not then graduated from the Naval Academy.

The fifteen old rear-admirals do not ask for promotion, for that could not be given them, as they had reached the highest rank possible when retired, but they do ask that the retired pay of major-generals, with whom they rank, should be given them, not as a reward for their honorable and efficient services in the civil war, but as an act of justice to them and as a relief from the humiliation which they have suffered and which they will suffer so long as they live unless the relief requested by them is given by the bills now under consider tion in both Naval Committees of Congress.

The increase of pay asked for will aggregate the sum of less than $18,000.

The Hull amendment, as it became the law, gave relief to 155 re-

The Hull amendment, as it became the law, gave relief to 155 retired officers of and below the rank of captain, but gave no relief to the fifteen old rear-admirals.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman if it is not true that in the original retirement bill, the personnel bill, all of the officers on the active list were given one grade higher on retirement?

Mr. FOSS. Yes; some of them.

Mr. HULL. Regardless of their rank on the active list. In other words, a rear-admiral of the junior grade would be retired as a rear-admiral of the senior grade.

Mr. FOSS. Yes. Mr. HULL. And that these men that were on the retired list

Mr. FOSS. Before that time.

Mr. HULL. That were retired before that time, and all of them had much greater civil war service than the great body of those we retired at a higher grade.

Mr. FOSS. That is true. These officers were in command of those.

Mr. HULL. When we applied promotion to the retired officers, as I understand it, we made it conform exactly to that of the Army

Mr. FOSS. Exactly. Mr. HULL. So that those old officers, those on the retired list, got no benefit from it at all.

Mr. FOSS. That is true.

Mr. PRINCE. Will the gentleman permit an inquiry?

Yes.

Mr. PRINCE. If this provision should obtain, would it permit anyone who was a cadet at Annapolis during the time of the civil war to receive any of the benefits of this provision?

Mr. FOSS. And was not in active service?
Mr. PRINCE. Well, if he was at the academy I think his time at the academy would be regarded as part of his service. Mr. HULL. He may have been a cadet the first year and have had service on sea afterwards during the civil war.

Mr. SLAYDEN. It expressly provides in the report that they shall not count the service at the academy.

Mr. PRINCE. I think the time put in at the Academy should not be considered, but I am inclined to think by a decision of the court—in other words, if a midshipman had been appointed in 1864, and was a fourth-class man, he would be regarded as a part of the Navy and might receive the benefits under this provision. If you would modify it by saying that he was engaged on board ship during the time of the civil war, I would have no objection to it.

Mr. FOSS. I want to say to my colleague from Illinois that the provision upon this point is identical with the one of the Army, and that it was adopted at the last session of Congress upon the motion of the gentleman from Iowa, and this is the provision

Mr. HULL. Now, before the gentleman starts on the next paragraph would it interrupt him for me to ask him a question about that on page 3?

Mr. FOSS. I want to just read this to the gentleman from Illinois:

That any officer of the Army not above the grade of captain who served with credit as an officer or enlisted man in the regular or volunteer forces during the civil war prior to April 9, 1865, otherwise than as a cadet.

I think that answers the question of the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. PRINCE. I beg your pardon, but does your provision say in the law "or otherwise than as a cadet?" If you have If you have that in your bill I have no objection, but if it is not in the body of the bill the putting of it in the report does not make it part of the law.

Mr. FOSS. This would not apply, because these men are much older than those, were longer out of the academy, and in the civil war, so it would not apply; but I have no objection to its introduction.

Mr. HULL, I will call the attention of the gentleman from Illinois, my colleague on the Committee on Military Affairs, that this is an exact copy of the provisions adopted last year with the exception that we provided "not above the grade of captain." This gives it to those on the retired list who are above the grade It is the same provision otherwise. Now, it says provided further," beginning on line 22-

Mr. FOSS. I was going to speak of that.

Mr. HULL. I did not know but what you could explain it more fully

Mr. FOSS. I will come to that in just a moment. also a further proviso. I have spoken of the rear-admirals who would be benefited by this provision, and there is a further proviso to the effect "that commodores coming under the provision of this section may, in the discretion of the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, be placed on the retired list of the Navy, with the rank and retired pay of rear-admiral (junior grade)." This will apply to three commodores, making an increase in their pay of $375 each.

Now, the second provision in this bill that I desire to call to the attention of the committee is in regard to retired officers who are doing active duty. Now, this was first presented to the House in the form of a separate bill, and my colleague upon the committee [Mr. MEYER] introduced the bill and made a report upon it, and by his motion it was inserted here upon the appropriation bill. This provision allows retired officers who are doing active duty to get the benefit of their active service upon Now, I yield to the gentleman from Iowa if he the retired list.

desires to ask a question.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, this provides way beyond anything that has ever affected the Army, in my judgment, if I understand it correctly—way beyond anything that should ever affect either branch of the service. It provides "that retired officers of the Navy who have retired for disabilities resulting from an incident of the service shall have for active duty the rank, pay, and allowances of officers on the active list of like length of active service." That means if two officers go into the service at the same time and one is retired and stays on the retired list five years and is ordered into active service, he goes in with the same rank of the man who has remained in active service all the time.

Mr. FOSS. As I understand it, if a man is on the retired list and he is called upon to do active duty, that the time spent in active duty, if over three years, shall be added to his previous active service prior to the time he went upon the retired list in determining his place upon the retired list.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me the gentleman is mistaken, because on the next page the provision reads, "and is actively employed for an aggregate period of three years, when detached from duty, retain the rank and highest retired pay of the grade they then hold." Now, he is not on the active pay of the grade they then hold." Now, he is not on the active list; he is on the retired list, but he goes in on the active list at the same grade with those who have the same length of service as himself. And I want to call my friend's attention to the fact that in the Army it is impossible for a man to secure any further promotion after he gets on the active list. We do give him when serving the pay of his rank, but no advance in rank and no possibility of taking advantage of the years he was on the retired list and to step onto the active list and start at a higher plane and then give him two retirements. As I understand it, the Navy has one grade of retirements as to all of these officers?

Mr. FOSS. Not to all of them. Mr. HULL. Who had civil-war service.

Mr. FOSS. And those who went out on the retired list under the personnel law, but not to all of them.

Mr. HULL. That is, a large majority of them. Now it is proposed to give him that retirement, and then put him back on the active list, and not only give him pay of the rank he really holds, but the pay of the rank of any man that is of the same length of service that he is. You put him back at promotion at once, and retire him the second time at the higher grade he holds while on active duty. I do not think that will go through without trouble when it is reached.

Mr. FOSS. We expect trouble. I want to say to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HULL] that I do not care to discuss this provision at this time in the general statement which I am making with regard to the bill, but I may say also that my colleague upon the committee, the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. MEYER], is more familiar with the effect of this provision than I am.

Here is his report on the proposition:

Mr. Meyer, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, submitted the following report (to accompany H. R. 5335):

The Committee on Naval Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 5335) providing for rank and pay for certain retired officers of the Navy, has fully considered the same, as it did similar measures in the Fifty-seventh and Fifty-eighth Congresses, and recommends its passage.

Although some changes may have been made in the detail of retired officers to active duty since the former reports, the merits of the measure remain the same, and the former reports are adopted, together with the Secretary's letter approving them.

[House reports Fifty-seventh Congress, first session, and Fifty-eighth Congress, second session.]

Section 1462 of the Revised Statutes prohibits the employment of retired naval officers on active duty except in time of war. Exception from the provision of said law is made in appropriation act approved June 7, 1900, authorizing for a period of twelve years from said date the employment on active duty at sea and on shore of such officers. While so employed, by the same act they receive the pay and allowances of officers of the active list of the grades from which they were retired.

while so employed, by the same act they receive the pay and allowances of officers of the active list of the grades from which they were retired.

Section 1459, Revised Statutes, withdraws retired officers from the line of promotion on the active list, and the act of August 5, 1882, prohibits promotion on the retired list.

By the provision in the act of June 7, 1900, during the period in which active employment is authorized, as far as relates to assignment to duty, the retired officer is placed upon the same footing in law as the officer of the active list. He is practically withdrawn from the retired list and becomes, as to duty, to all intents and purposes an active officer. No corresponding amendment was, however, made to the statute above quoted prohibiting promotion. Therefore, while performing above duty of whatever character, the retired officer received the pay of the grade from which he was retired, and during the whole of his employment, which may be for twelve years, receives no advancement, as do other officers of the military services.

The total active duty of a few of the officers in the grade of lieutenant may be as great as forty years.

This bill is intended to give to these retired officers actively employed credit for advancement for their active services. The period of such duty is utilized to fix the rank with that of an officer of the active list of corresponding active service and thereafter to promote them side by side. No credit whatever attaches for such time as may have been spent upon the retired list not employed.

There is at the present time less than twenty officers who will fall within the provision of this measure. Of these there are five whose active duty since retirement, added to previous active service, will entitle them to advancement. The increase in pay involved is approximately $3,500. Some of the others may hereafter. If continued on active duty, carn promotion to a higher grade. If all are so employed during the whole period of twelve years, sixteen will eventually vanced.

During the past year two retired officers have, while on active duty, died. A few exceptional cases of retirement following the civil war exist where this bill, if enacted, would operate to reduce the rank and pay of the officers if ordered to duty, and one case at least wherein, under the act of June 7, 1900, the officer's pay is less than his retired

As the purpose of the measure is intended to be beneficial, a proviso is attached to exempt such cases from its operation.

This bill is approved by the Navy Department and is in accord with the recommendation of the Secretary made in his last annual report. The amendment is also recommended by the Secretary.

NAVY DEPARTMENT, Washington, March 8, 1904.

SIR: Referring to the bill (H. R. 9055) providing for rank and pay for certain retired officers of the Navy, and to the Department's communication of January 30, 1904, printed as a pamphlet and headed "No. 43, H. R. 9055, providing for rank and pay of certain retired officers," in regard thereto I have the honor to advise you that after careful consideration of the matter the Department concludes that, inasmuch as the detailing of retired officers to active duty under the provisions of the haval appropriation act approved June 7, 1900, is entirely within its discretion, the views of the Bureau of Navigation, as quoted in the letter above mentioned, are without such force as to justify the conclusion arrived at, which is adverse to the passage of the bill. The letter under consideration is accordingly withdrawn, and concurrence is expressed in the views of the committee as set forth in House Report No. 1788, Fifty-seventh Congress, first session, after the approval of the bill by the Department through its then Secretary. The bill H. R. 9055 is therefore commended to the favorable consideration of your committee.

Very respectfully,

Chas. H. Darling,

Hon. George Edmund Foss,
Chairman Committee on Naval Affairs,
House of Representatives.

Now, there is another provision upon the bill which I desire to call to the attention of the committee, and that is with regard to a board of investigation. On page 31 of the bill it says:

The Secretary of the Navy is hereby authorized to appoint a board of five persons, not more than two of whom shall be naval officers, which board shall investigate and report not later than December 1, 1907, as to all matters of construction, management, and administration of the navy-yards and stations, with a view of placing the same on a more economical basis, and to defray the compensation and expense of said board, the sum of $15,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated.

This is a new provision, and I presume will be subject to a point of order, but I trust it will not be made, because I have great hope that this provision if passed, and that board if appointed, will do a great work in devising some plan of placing our navy-yards, which are largely industrial establishments, upon a more business-like basis.

As you know, in the navy-yards we have the bureau system, and the administration of navy-yards is conducted by bureaus. We find that these bureaus are sometimes little kingdoms in themselves in these different navy-yards. There is no private establishment that would be run in this manner, and we feel that if some consolidation could be brought about in these navy-yards it would bring about a more economical administration. And it was with that in view that we have inserted in this bill this provision. I may say that I think most of the reforms which will come to the Navy Department must come from outside, and so we have inserted here in this bill that only two of the persons constituting this board shall be naval officers, but that the majority of the board shall be civilians. They should be engineers or men experienced in the management of large industrial or shipbuilding plants.

I may say that a few years ago the committee made a trip of inspection around to the navy-yards, and they came to the con-clusion that by a consolidation of the light, heat, and power plants in the different navy-yards these yards could be put upon a more businesslike and economical basis, and, as a result of their investigation, they inserted in the bill a provision which has brought about that consolidation, and I believe that it will be a great measure of economy when it is thoroughly carried out through our whole naval establishment. And it is along this line that the committee is moving to-day.

Now, we have also inserted here in this bill another provision to the effect, on page 38 of the bill, that-

The Secretary of the Navy is authorized to make a thorough investigation regarding cost of articles or material manufactured by the Government in navy-yards and naval stations, and the cost of like articles and materials purchased in the open market, and report to the next Congress the information obtained and the difference found in such cost, and such other information as he may deem advisable.

That is a very important inquiry, in the opinion of the Naval Committee. We are manufacturing some things in the navyyards to-day, and we are trying to arrive through this investiga-tion at their cost, in order to see how that cost compares with the cost of similar things in the open market. I believe that it will be an incentive, such an investigation of this sort, to the men in the different navy-yards to produce materials at a lower cost if they can be made to feel that that cost will be compared with the cost of similar articles purchased in the open market.

Now, there is another provision in this bill which undoubtedly is new legislation, and that relates to the establishment and organization of a corps of dental surgeons. We have no dentists in the Navy to-day, and as you know, our men are frequently on ships for a number of months. They go on a cruise for two or three years, and are away from where they could obtain the means of properly taking care of their teeth. The Army has a corps of dentists, but the Navy never has had a corps; and yet I think there is more reason why the Navy should have dentists than the Army, because the Army is continually on the land, whereas the Navy is on the sea. The following is the report of Mr. Cousins on the subject:

Mr. Cousins, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, submitted the following report (to accompany H. R. 13851):

The Committee on Naval Affairs, having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 13851) authorizing the appointment of dental surgeons in the Navy, report the same without amendment and recommend its

A bill substantially the same as this was recommended by the Navy Department in the following letter:

NAVY DEPARTMENT, Washington, March 2, 1904.

NAYY DEPARTMENT, Washington, March 2, 1904.

Sir: Referring to the Department's letters of May 29, 1902, January 26 and February 8, 1904, reporting upon bills for the employment of dental surgeons in the Navy, and recommending the enactment of a measure authorizing the Secretary of the Navy to employ under contract not more than fifteen such surgeons, I have the honor to state that after further consideration of the matter the Department withdraws its previous recommendations in the premises and recommends instead the passage of the measure of which a draft is inclosed. The main points of difference between the bill heretofore suggested and that now proposed are that the latter authorizes thirty instead of fifteen dental surgeons, and provides that they shall have the rank and pay of acting assistant surgeons, instead of being employed under contract at not to exceed $1,800 per annum.

Acting assistant surgeons, of whom twenty-five were authorized by the act of May 4, 1808 (30 Stat., 380), to be appointed by the President for temporary service, have the rank of assistant surgeons and receive the pay provided for the latter by section 1556 of the Revised Statutes, namely: During the first five years after date of appointment, when at sea, $1,700; on shore duty, $1,400; on leave or waiting orders, $1,000; on shore duty, $1,600; on leave or waiting orders, $1,200.

W. H. Moody, Secretary,

W. H. MOODY, Secretary.

Hon, EUGENE HALE,

Hon, Eugene Hale,
Chairman Committee on Naval Affairs,
United States Senate.

At present there is no provision of law under which the Department can employ dental surgeons except one for service at the Naval Academy.
Surgeon-General Rixey informs this committee that the dental operations performed by the hospital stewards "are limited to simple procedures and urgent cases," that "this arrangement is a make-shift unsatisfactory to the Bureau," that "the necessity of the care of the teeth of the enlisted men existed, and its importance to the health of the Navy is appreciated," and therefore this makeshift was resortal to "until legislation could be obtained giving advantages to the enlisted men of the Navy similar to those which the Army has had for several years."

To show the estimate of the importance and value of the service rendered by the dentists in the United States Army, the Surgeon-General submitted copies of reports of Army officers, from which we quote the following extract from the report of the Surgeon-General United States Army:

"The energies and resources of the Dental Corps have been taxed to their fullest extent in caring for those officers and enlisted men who have sought their services for the relief of suffering, and this has made it necessary in some instances for the dental surgeons to operate daily from 8 a. m. to 5 or 6 p. m. The great amount of service that has been rendered by the dental surgeons could not have been accomplished but for these long hours of work and the assistance accorded them through the extra details of members of the Hospital Corps.

"The tabulation of diseases and injuries of the mouth and jaws, of the teeth and gums, and of operations and treatment which follow shows that a large part of the time and skill of the dental surgeons was expended in giving relief from the suffering caused by dental caries, pulpitis, pericementitis, alveolar abscess, pyorrhea alveolaris, and gingivitis. The comparatively large number of teeth extracted is due to the great prevalence of dental caries of a severe type among the enlisted men who are serving or have served in Cuba, Porto Rico, or the Philippines.

"The services of the dental surgeons have been highly appreciated by the officers and enlisted men of the Regular and Volunteer armies, and Philippines.

"The services of the dental surgeons have been highly appreciated by the officers and enlisted men of the Regular and Volunteer armies, and have proved very satisfactory to the Medical Department, because they have been able to relieve a great amount of acute suffering and to conserve a large number of teeth and restore them to a healthy condition, thus almost immediately returning to duty many cases that were previously carried for several days upon the company's sick report. This has resulted in greatly reducing the loss of valuable time to the service."

[Extract from the Surgeon-General's indorsement of Senate bill 5420.]

"The dental surgeons appointed in accordance with the act of February 2, 1901, are rendering excellent service, and their services are highly appreciated by the officers and enlisted men of the Army, especially in the Philippines and at the large military posts in the United States. A larger number could be utilized to good advantage, and the permanent retention of dental surgeons as part of the military establishment will, in my opinion, be in interest of the service."

[Extract from the report of General Grant, Department of Texas.] "DENTAL SURGEONS.

"In my opinion, after careful investigation, the principal needs of the service, with respect to dental surgeons, are: First, more dental surgeons; second, a suitable operating room at each post; third, some positive and practicable methods compelling enlisted men to give proper attention to personal care of the teeth. I believe that there should be three dental surgeons assigned to this department, if possible, but not less than two under any circumstances. It is well known that the Philippine climate has a deleterious effect upon teeth, and every regiment, before being sent to the Philippines, should have careful attention given to dental requirements, while those regiments returning should be no less carefully attended to in this regard."

THE MILITARY SECRETARY,
War Department, Washington, D. C.
(Through military channels.)

(Through military channels.)

SIR: I have the honor to invite attention to the importance of dentists in the Army, especially at remote stations, in order that officers and enlisted men may have proper treatment.

While in command at Camp Marahui, Mindanao, certain officers, including myself, and a number of enlisted men suffered very much from the want of such service. Later, however, a dentist was provided, and great relief and benefit were realized.

There are times when the service of a dentist are as necessary as that of an Army surgeon. From my experience in the service, including all parts of the United States and dependencies, I can testify to the importance of this branch of the service and to much suffering from the want of it.

It would, perhaps, be desirable to have dental surgeons assigned to certain regiments in the same way as chaplains.

I have the honor to be, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

MARION P. MAUS,

Colonel Twentieth U. S. Infantry, Commanding.

There exists in the Navy as much, if not more, urgent need of the Colonel Twentieth U. S. Infantry, Commanding.

There exists in the Navy as much, if not more, urgent need of the service of dental surgeons than exists in the Army, and quite as potent reasons, both humane and economic, for supplying the need. First, because of the early age at which a large percentage enter the naval service; second, because of the longer periods those at sea are inaccessible to competent dentists.

The apprentice boys in training schools and on ships, who February 1, 1904, numbered 4,519, are taken into the service when the care of the dental surgeon is necessary to protect them from the effects of dental disorders, which, either immediately or later, in the absence of such care, affect for life their general health, comfort, longevity, and efficiency.

care, affect for life their general health, comfort, longevity, and efficiency.

The Government assumes in a sense the guardianship of these boys when it receives them for life service in the Navy; therefore for humane reasons nothing so vitally affecting their health and comfort should be neglected.

The attention of this committee was called to charts made by a doctor of medicine and dental surgery, employed as a hospital steward in the naval service, which show the condition of the mouths and teeth of fifty boys now, or recently, in training at the naval-training station at Newport. One apprentice, but 16 years of age, had lost every one of the teeth from his upper jaw; another, aged 18 years, exhibited cavities in his fourteen upper teeth; another, aged 16 years, had lost practically all of his molar teeth, and the few remaining teeth were imperfect; another, aged 17 years, had lost seven teeth, and another, aged 18 years, had lost seven molar teeth. Several others of the fifty cases from 16 to 18 years of age had lost from three to six teeth. It was said of these cases, in general, that they presented either ordinary cavities of decay; dead teeth; inflamed gums; chronic abscesses discharging pus in the mouth; pus-producing diseases of the teeth, gums, and underlying bone, or germ-laden foreign matter in contact with the gums and teeth. Such conditions cause gastric and intestinal disorders, impair vitality, and make one more susceptible to infectious diseases. Experts in dentistry inform us that, under present conditions, a large percentage of the cases exhibited from this one station must inevitably lose their teeth at an early age, which may render them pensionable under existing law.

There are no available statistics showing the conditions throughout the Navy, but the general condition is probably well illustrated by the reports from two vessels, covering in each instance a period of one year, which, summarized, are as follows:

[From the United States receiving ship Wabash.]

The hospital steward detailed to dental service: Restored by filling, crowning, etc_____ Treatment for various diseases_____ _teeth__ 990-_do___ 502 Extracted do Simple, chronic, and ulcerated conditions of the gums treated cases do Diseased nerves of teeth treated do Dead teeth treated and filled do do 92

[United States hospital ship.]

" " I was employed for twelve months by special agreement with the Navy Department to service as a dental surgeon for the officers and enlisted men of the U. S. S. Yosemite, and during that time more than 75 per cent of the officers and enlisted men required and received dental service at my hands. Many of the cases were of a more or less serious character and not a few of them had resulted from incompetent dental service rendered by men who were not educated to dentistry. No class of men are so helplessly in need of skilled dentistry as the men of the United States Navy. I did dental work both while the ship was at anchor in the harbor and while at sea.

As dental conditions in the Navy probably differ from those in the

As dental conditions in the Navy probably differ from those in the Army only by reason of the earlier age at enlistment and the longer period of service in the former, we quote from three physicians experienced in Army medical service, as follows:

[Thomas S. Latimer, M. D.]

[Thomas S. Latimer, M. D.]

"There can be no doubt that many soldiers were as effectually disabled by toothache, facial neuralgia, and other aliments, oral and gastric, due to lack of proper treatment, as from any other form of sickness or from gunshot wounds.

"Precisely as the exhaustion, exposure, and unsuitability of food incident to an active campaign is the need of good masticatory organs. These being neglected or improperly treated scurvy, dyspepsia, dysentery, and diarrhea are prone to ensue.

"Nor is there any disability from any injury or sickness, even where not directly connected with imperfect mastication, that is not more protracted when mouth complications exist.

"I need scarcely say that no aliments occasion greater suffering than toothache and neuralgia arising from decayed teeth. Nor are any more susceptible of prompt and complete relief under proper management. I may add that the regimental surgeon is incompetent to render the service required."

[Thomas Opie, M. D.]

[Thomas Opie, M. D.]

"That the health, strength, longevity, and courage of the soldier depend in large measure upon his powers of mastication can not be questioned. The dental specialist is best equipped for dealing with these lesions of the teeth, and surely the man who fights his country's battles has the right to claim the comfort and health which accrues from their being in perfect order."

[W. O. Owens, M. D.]

[W. O. Owens, M. D.]

"For seven years I have been giving especial attention to the diseases of the mouth and teeth because of their influence on the general health. During the time in which I was in charge of Corregidor hospital about 300 soldiers, more or less disabled by dental disorders, were under treatment. I recall one case in particular, a diarrheal trouble of several months' standing, which resisted treatment until placed under the care of a dentist, whose treatment, directed to the mouth alone, effected a cure and the restoration of the soldier to active duty in two weeks. There were fifteen or twenty similar cases, known as pyorrhea of the sockets of the teeth, with pus bathing the teeth, mixing with food, and entering therewith the alimentary tract. Neglected, such cases cause a pensionable disability."

When men are kept at sea continuously for a considerable time or located at remote stations where dental surgeons are inaccessible, it seems to us an inexcusable hardship, and the neglect of proper treatment for the teeth may ultimately result in great expense through pensions, besides the inhumanity and suffering which necessarily occurs in the absence of prompt and scientific treatment of the teeth when needed. The charts or diagrams of some fifty or more particular cases represented to this committee from a single station at Newport, R. I., is ample proof of conditions which ought not to exist.

We therefore recommend that House bill 13851 be enacted.

Now, there is another provision to which I wish to call the attention of the committee, which is new legislation, and that is with reference to the establishment of a Hospital Corps in the UNITED STATES NAVAL HOSPITAL CORPS-MEMORANDUM.

A Hospital Corps of not less than 1,000 men is now needed. To enlist and retain such a corps of the desired quality it is believed that greater inducements for continued service must be offered. Unless a good prospect of ultimate promotion with consequent increase in pay be held out as a reward for long and faithful service, the pecuniary advantages and comforts of civil life will continue to outweigh in the minds of ambitious hospital stewards contemplating reenlistment the attractions of the naval service, handicapped, as it is, with the privations and inconveniences of sea duty. The recommendations of the Bureau to increase the warrant grade of the Hospital Corps from twenty-five, now allowed by law, to fifty was approved by the Department and included in the provisions of Senate bill 2206 and House bill 12846 of the Fifty-ninth Congress, first session. The bill, however, failed to receive consideration, though approved by three Secretaries of the Navy and favorably reported by the House Naval Committee. This bill (No. 12846) is now on the Calendar before the House. The same bill (No. 2206) has been read before the Senate and referred to the Naval Committee. The increase in the warrant

The Naval Hospital Corps, since its organization in 1898, has proved on the corps and retain in the service men of sobriety, intelligence, aptitude, and fair education. It is discouraging to note, how the navel of the navel of the navel of the Navy thus loses the services of many desirable men who have had four years' training and experience. New enlistments have not been sufficient to fill the vacancies thus created in the corps. The Naval Republication of the Navy and the Naval Na

REASON FOR PRESENT CONDITION.

1. The rating of apothecary (hospital steward) was established December 8, 1866, with pay at $60 per month. There has been no legislation increasing this pay since that date.

2. The pay is insufficient and the prospects of advancement, which should be held out as an inducement, are not adequate enough to attract and hold experienced and trained men.

3. The fact that the Hospital Corps is deprived of the benefits of Executive orders increasing the pay of all other enlisted men of the Navy. In connection, it is to be noted that the benefits of added compensation for trained men provided for by the Executive orders of June 26, 1903, and just recently, November 28, 1906, are not shared by the members of the Hospital Corps. It is imperative that legislation be enacted to settle this question of pay in the Hospital Corps at once and for all and give it a merited share in the benefit of Executive orders, which have up to the present time increased the pay of chief petty officers of the line one-fourth above that of the chief petty officers of the Hospital Corps.

1. To the service:

(a) Will allay serious dissatisfaction among the members of the Hospital Corps.

(b) Will stimulate reenlistments and offer inducements to a class of men (trained nurses) now impossible to induce to enter the service.

(c) Will insure an efficient nursing staff for the service and an intelligent, efficient organization for those important duties of assistant to the surgeon in operations and preventive medicine. The Hospital Corps must be relied upon for all the medical and surgical nursing aboard our battle ships and cruisers; they must be competent to assist in surgical operations and with the technique of antiseptic work, whether aboard ship or on shore. As these men are trained so will our success be in saving life in and after battle. Besides, in preventive medicine, especially in the Tropics, the trained men are invaluable in keeping the personnel in good condition.

There is also another new provision for the reorganization of

There is also another new provision for the reorganization of the Naval Academy band. We have a band at the Naval Academy the same as the Army has a band at the Military Academy at West Point. Now this provision in regard to the Navy band is simply this: It puts the band of the Naval Academy on exactly the same footing as that of the band at West Point. Our desire is to keep these two services as nearly alike as possible. Mr. GOULDEN.

Mr. GOULDEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman from Illinois tell us what is the difference between the treatment of the two bands now, and why this is so?

Mr. FOSS. The Naval Academy band is paid less than the band at West Point.

Now, there is another new provision upon this bill, and that is with reference to the increase in the Marine Corps. provided here that the Commandant of the Marine Corps shall have the rank and pay of a major-general. At the present time he is a brigadier-general. We also have provided for some additional officers: One major, assistant adjutant and inspector; one major, assistant quartermaster; two captains, assistant quartermasters; one major, assistant paymaster; two captains, assistant paymasters; three majors, ten captains, fifteen first lieutenants; also one sergeant-major, twelve quartermaster-sergeants, nineteen gunnery-sergeants; forty-seven sergeants; eighty-five corporals; twelve drummers; twelve trumpeters, and 800 privates

Mr. SLAYDEN. If it will be agreeable to the gentleman, I should like to ask him a question?

Mr. FOSS. I yield with pleasure.

Mr. SLAYDEN. I have not looked at the bill, but in your report I see it stated that you provide a certain increase in the Marine Corps of enlisted men, noncommissioned officers, and so on, up to and including the grade of colonel, then there is a skip. Mr. FOSS

No; there is no increase in grade of colonel. Mr. FOSS. No; there is no increase in grade of colone.

Mr. SLAYDEN. You maintain the grade up to and including the rank of colonel, then you prescribe there shall be a majorgeneral. You do not provide for any brigadier-general.

Mr. FOSS. The commandant at the present time is a brigadier-general. This provision says:

One major-general commandant, with the pay and allowances of officers of like grade in the Army, and the rank of brigadier-general in the Marine Corps is hereby discontinued.

Mr. SLAY-DEN. Then you provide for a specific discontinu-

Mr. FOSS. It is a specific discontinuance.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Then the next rank after colonel is that of a major-general?

Mr. FOSS. Yes.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Going up it is a major-general?

Mr. FOSS. And coming down to colonel.
Mr. SLAYDEN. We approach it in different ways. Is it your purpose to fill that place, if Colonel Elliott is promoted, and make him brigadier-general?

Mr. FOSS. It is not, for it is done away with. The gentleman will understand that the Marine Corps is not based strictly on Army formation.

Mr. SLAYDEN. A major-general will be appointed for life and be retired at the legal age?

Mr. FOSS. At the age of 64.
Mr. SLAYDEN. My friend and colleague on the Military Committee, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Prince], who is an expert on this matter, wants to know where a major-general of the Marine Corps would command in the event of war?

Mr. FOSS.

The whole corps.

DEN. Will the gentleman tell us the number of Mr. GOULDEN. enlisted men and officers in the Marine Corps as it exists to-day?

Mr. FOSS. In the Marine Corps?
Mr. GOULDEN. You propose an increase of 800 in this bill; how many are there now in the corps?

Mr. FOSS. We have in the Marine Corps 278 officers and This will increase the number of privates by 800.

Mr. PRINCE. Will the gentleman yield to just a question or two? I would like to know, as a matter of information, what duties as commanding officer has the commandant of the Marine

Mr. FOSS. Well, he is stationed here in Washington and is charged with all matters of administration in connection with the Marine Corps.

Mr. PRINCE. Well, would he, in case of a naval warfare with any country, take charge upon any of the ships, or would he remain here, in the nature of a bureau chief, managing and conducting the war from his seat in Washington? He would not take charge upon any naval ship, as far as that is concerned, because there are not more than sixty or seventy marines upon any one ship. But I may say of General Elliott that he did take charge of a number of troops in Panama, when there was difficulty there a few years ago, and down in Cuba: but usually there are not over 2,000 or 2,500 marines assembled at any one particular point in case of trouble.

Mr. Chairman, suppose we make him a major-general? With such a small organization as he has, suppose he should land his troops somewhere where there was trouble, and there was a major-general of the Army, but his commission outranked that of the major-general of the Army. Would be command or out-rank the real general? Mr. FOSS. Well, I want to say that General Elliott is a real general. He is a fighting man.

Mr. PRINCE. I have no doubt of that.

Mr. FOSS. And his whole career, from the time he entered the service of the Government up to the present time has been that of a fighting man.

Mr. PRINCE. Yes; but we are only watching his recent ca-He started in as a colonel, then a brigadier-general, next a major-general, and we are wondering how high this rank should be for this small detachment, the most of whom are doing duty here around Washington.

Mr. FOSS. I wish to say that if the House passes this bill we will have for the Marine Corps in the neighborhood of we will have for the Marine Corps in the neighborhood of 9,500 men. If I remember rightly, we have about 58,000 men in the Army and seven or eight major-generals. I don't know just how many, but seven or eight anyway, and it would seem to me that the Marine Corps was entitled to at least one major-general, because that would be a greater proportion of men to that rank than now obtains in the Army at the present

Mr. PRINCE. Let me suggest to my colleague that the Army is officered for a skeleton organization, which the President can, at any time, increase to the maximum of 100,000 These officers doubtless would have somewhat to do with the militia also, if they were called out; but the only point I am making to the committee is that the moment you have one major-general or a lieutenant-general in any branch of the service, then you must raise the other branches of the service to a like dignity. If this officer could do the work heretofore as a brigadier-general, and there is no claim that he did not do it well, what is the necessity for making him a major-general now, except merely to lift him up to an equality of grade with others in other branches of the service?

Is there a necessity for this, or is it just merely a compliment? Mr. FOSS. I want to say to the gentleman that there is no doubt but that he can perform the service of commandant of the Marine Corps with the rank of a brigadier-general, and he could probably do it with the rank of colonel. He might even do it with a lesser rank, but, as the gentleman knows, these higher ranks are largely based upon the number of men who are in a corps or in an army, and we felt that with 9,500 men this corps was entitled as a matter of justice, to the rank of a major-general. Our bureau chiefs in the Navy Department have that rank-that is to say, the rank of rear-admiral, which corresponds to that of major-general—and we felt that it was no more than fair that the Marine Corps should have its commandant placed upon the list with that rank.

Mr. GOULDEN. If the gentleman will allow me to make an observation, I most heartily indorse the position taken by the Naval Committee, and I think my friend from Illinois [Mr. PRINCE], who evidently is seeking for information, will see the justice of the recommendation. This man, General Elliott, has worked his way up from a second lieutenant, all through the various grades, and is certainly entitled to consideration at the hands of Congress, and I trust that the recommendation of the committee will prevail. He is certainly what the Chairman has well said, a fighting man, an efficient officer, and after all these years of active service, with but few more remaining until he is retired, he is entitled to that consideration and ought to receive the rank of major-general.

Mr. FOSS. Now, gentlemen of the committee, I desire to call our attention to other features in the bill. We recommend Mr. FOSS. Now, gentiemen of the commend your attention to other features in the bill. We recommend your attention to other features in the bill. We recommend recommended 3,000, but in view of the fact that our enlistments have been somewhat slow we cut down their recommendation to 1.500.

I have placed in the report a statement showing the number of ships now under construction, and it will be seen from a perusal of that report that at the end of this year we will have compara-tively few ships building. Most of the ships will have been completed.

Now, in regard to the new authorization of this year-our naval programme—it will be recalled that last year we provided in the bill for one battle ship-in the bill for one battle ship—

One first-class battle ship, carrying as heavy armor and as powerful armament as any known vessel of its class, to have the highest practicable speed and the greatest practicable radius of action, and to cost, exclusive of armament and armor, not to exceed $6,000,000: Provided, That before approving any plans or specifications for the construction of such battle ships the Secretary of the Navy shall afford, by advertisement or otherwise, in his discretion, a reasonable opportunity to any competitive constructor who may desire so to do to submit the plans and specifications for his consideration, for which said plans, should the same be used by the Department and be not submitted by or on behalf of a successful bidder for the contract, such compensation shall be paid as the Secretary of the Navy shall deem just and equitable out of the amount herein appropriated under the head "Contingent, Navy:" Provided, That before any proposals for such battle ships shall be issued or any bids received and accepted the Secretary of the Navy shall report to Congress at its next session full details covering the type of such battle ships and the specifications for the same, including its displacement, draft, and dimensions, and the kind and extent of armor and armament.

The Secretary of the Navy has submitted to Congress a report addressed to the Speaker of the House, known as House Document 295, relative to this new battle ship. I thought I had a copy of the report here, but I have mislaid it. I shall insert it in the Record. It is as follows:

also afforded, by advertisement and otherwise, as directed, every reasonable opportunity to competent constructors, who might desire to do so, to submit for the Department's consideration such plans and specifications of a battle ship as they might desire to present. In each case it was directed that all plans and specifications should be submitted to the Department on November 1, 1906, in order that due consideration might be given to the same prior to the assembling of Congress.

2. In conformity with the Department's instructions to the Board on Construction, and in response to the Department's invitation to such competent constructors as might desire to avail themselves thereof, there were submitted to the Department, on November 1, 1906, the following designs and sketches:

 Select from such designs and plans that complete design which, in its judgment, is the best calculated of those submitted to comply with the terms of the provision contained in the act making appropriations for the naval service, approved June 29, 1906, namely, for the construction of—

"One first-class battle ship, carrying as heavy armor and as powerful armament as any known vessel of its class, to have the highest practicable speed and greatest practicable radius of action, and to cost, exclusive of armament and armor, not exceeding $6,000,000."

4. The attention of Congress is especially invited to the report of the above-noted board on designs, this report having been submitted to the Department under date of November 19, 1906, and duly approved.

5. As will be noted from an examination of the report of the board on designs, the 510-foot design of the board on construction (officers quarters forward) was found to be—

* * The most suitable of all the designs submitted for the purposes of the United States naval service within the provisions of the act of Congress mentioned in the board's precept. * * *

A vessel constructed on this design will carry as "heavy armor and as powerful armament as any known vessel of its class;" it will have a speed which is believed to be the "highest practicable" for a vessel of this type and class in the present state of knowledge; it will have "the highest practicable radius of action," and can be built within the limit of cost fixed by Congress.

6. While full details of the design selected by the board on designs as best fulfilling the conditions imposed are herewith submitted, the principal characteristics are, for the convenience of Congress, summarized as follows:

Armament:

Main battery—

Ten 12-inch breech-loading rifles.

Secondary battery—

Fourteen 5-inch rapid-fire guns.

Four 3-pounder saluting guns.

Four 3-pounder semiautomatic guns.

Two 3-inch field pieces.

Two machine guns, caliber .30.

Two submerged torpedo tubes.

Two submerged torpedo tubes.

7. The hull is protected by a water-line belt of armor 8 feet in width, whose maximum thickness is 11 inches and whose cross section is uniform throughout the length of the belt. This belt armor gives effective protection to the boilers, machinery, and magazine spaces, and, most important of all for vessels of this type whose centers of gravity are necessarily very high, affords in connection with the casemate armor an extensive compartmental subdivision, a reasonable assurance of the maintenance of the stability of the vessel under battle conditions. The side above the main belt armor is protected by armor 7 feet 3 inches wide and of a maximum thickness of 10 inches. This armor is likewise of uniform cross section throughout, and in length is only slightly less than that of the main water-line belt armor. Above the main casemate armor amidships the side is protected by armor 5 inches in thickness, which affords protection to the smokepipes, the major portion of the secondary battery of 5-inch guns, and the hull structure. Suitable athwartship and diagonal bulkheads are worked at the extremities of the belt and casemate armor, and a protective deck of suitable thickness is provided throughout the length of the vessel, the arrangement and thickness being as indicated in the specifications and plans.

8. With particular reference to the offensive qualities of the proposed design, it may be noted that the arrangement of the main battery guns is such as to permit a broadside fire 25 per cent greater than that of the broadside fire of any battle ship now built, or, so far as is known, under construction, and the average elevation of the axes of these guns above the water line is believed to be greater than that of any known battle ship, thus affording a distinct advantage in longrange firing under all conditions of weather.

9. With respect to the defensive qualities other than those dependent upon armor protection, the arrangement of the interior structure of the vessel is such as to give the maximum degree of protection to all vital portions by means of unusually effective compartmental subdivision, so that, in conjunction with the armor protection already noted, the defensive qualities of this vessel are believed to be distinctly superior to those of any battle ship hitherto designed.

10. In this connection it may be noted that the percentage of weight allotted to buill and armor is markedly greater than the percentage of such weights allotted to similar purposes in the largest battle ship now in existence, and the actual total of such weights is, in the proposed design, approximately 3,000 tons greater than in the largest battle ship so far built.

11. The design herewith forwarded provides for a trial speed of 21 knots, and can be arranged for the installation of either reciprocating or turbine machinery, outline specifications for both types of machinery having been prepared. Provision is also made for the stowage of a large amount of oil fuel without in any degree reducing the capacity of the coal bunkers.

12. It is believed that the foregoing brief statement of the principal characteristics of the design recommended for approval will enable the Congress to form an opinion as to the merits of the design as a whole, but full details are herewith submitted as directed.

3. In conclusion, the Department desires to point out that it has regarded the preparation of the designs of this battle ship and all data in relation thereto as confidential, believing that it was not for the best interests of the naval service that designs which had involved so much arduous labor and the utilization of all the information, experimental and otherwise, which the Department had been able to obtain should be given publicity in such manner as might afford material assistance to those who might subsequently use the same to the disadvantage of this country. All the outline plans, detailed descriptions, etc., are now

The provision which we recommend to the committee at this time for this year is the following:

That for the purpose of further increasing the naval establishment of the United States the President is hereby authorized to have constructed, by contract or in the navy-yards, as hereinafter provided, one first-class battle ship, similar in all essential characteristics and additional to the battle ship authorized by the act making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1907, plans and specifications for which last-named vessel have already been prepared and submitted by the Secretary of the Navy for the information of Congress, as required by the provisions of the aforesaid act.

In other words, the committee recommends to this committee that we authorize this year one first-class battle ship, similar in all respects, which shall be a sister ship to the one of last year. I wish to say in regard to this recommendation that the committee had several recommendations before it. In the first place, the general board in the Navy Department made a recommendation as to what our naval programme should be this year. They recommended two battle ships, two scout cruisers, four destroyers, some torpedo boats, and gunboats and colliers, and an ammunition vessel, which would cost $33,000,000.

The Board of Construction also recommends two battle ships, an ammunition vessel, and some scout cruisers and destroyers, colliers, and gunboats, the cost of which would amount to $31,000,000. But the committee, after a careful consideration $31,000,000. But the committee, after a careful consideration of all of these propositions which were presented to the committee and the recommendations of the former Secretary of the Navy and the now Attorney-General, Mr. Bonaparte, and the present Secretary of the Navy, Mr. Metcalf—I say, after considering their recommendations, and they were before the committee at a hearing, our committee recommended this naval programme of one battle ship additional to the one of last year, and also two torpedo-boat destroyers, to cost exclusive of armament not to exceed $850,000 each, and further recommended an increase in the authorization for submarine boats to the amount of $3,000,000, of which only $500,000 is appropriated in this bill in addition to the appropriation of $500,000 which was made last

I have stated briefly now, in a general way, what is in this naval appropriation bill, because I wish to have every member of this committee understand that there is nothing at all concealed in any way, and we invite the most careful inspection and the most thorough debate and consideration upon every item here. We recommend this large ship because our naval experts believe it is the best and most economical ship to build and that it will carry the greatest offensive and defensive power of any ship now built. Other nations, of course, are building these large ships. England has built her Dreadnought, and she is now engaged in building three more Dreadnoughts. Japan has recently launched the Satsuma, a ship of 19,200 tons, and is now building a ship of even larger tonnage. I may say that the naval experts of the whole world, of every naval power on the face of the globe, are unanimous in favor of increasing the tonnage of the ships. I may say that France also is building six large battle ships of great tonnage. I propose to put in this statement which I have made to-day some of the arguments which are used in favor of the large ships for the information of the members of the committee.

I may say also that I believe that our naval programme which we recommend this year is, after all, only a modest programme. We could not do less than recommend one big battle ship in addition to the one of last year. There is no man to-day who realizes the great interests which our country has upon this hemisphere and upon the other who does not feel down in his heart that we should maintain at this time a strong and efficient navy on the sea. Gentlemen, I thank you for your consideration. [Applause.]

APPENDIX.

THE SUPERIORITY OF BIG SHIPS OVER LITTLE SHIPS.

[By Lieutenant-Commander Sims.]

It requires no arguments to show that a single large battle ship could promptly defeat a single small one, because the former has greater speed, more heavy guns, and better protection, which qualities enable her to refuse or accept battle, choose her own distance and her own position with respect to sun and wind. The same is, of course, true with respect to a fleet of large vessels and a fleet of small ones, expected the state of the state of the same is, of course, true with respect to a fleet of large vessels and a fleet of small ones, expected the state of the state of the same is, of course, the wind is the state of the same is, of course, expected the state of the same is considered to the same and the same of our possible enemies increases his naval force by, say, four large vessels, costing $40,000,000, each having a broadside fire of about eight 12-inch guns, and if it be assumed that the national defense requires that our naval power be increased by at least an equal fightling force of the money? Can it be shown that a squadron of four of the large vessels is superior in all essential fightling qualifies that the same of the same state o

That is, should we build a certain number of 20,000-ton ships, each having a broadside fire of eight or ten 12-inch guns, or shall we expend the same sum of money for a larger number of smaller ships, each having a less number of 12-inch guns.

Manifestly, our decision must depend upon the relative fighting ability, not of single vessels, but of a fleet of the large vessels as compared with a fleet composed of the number of small vessels that can be built for the same amount of money. Each fleet's fighting ability depends, of course, upon the individual and tactical qualities of the different types. These qualities have been set forth in detail in a paper that was reproduced in the Congressional Record of January 14, 1907, in, I believe, successful refutation of another paper expressing the opposite view, but apparently based upon incomplete and erroneous information. The following principal advantages of the big ship over the small ship may, however, be set forth briefly:

Taking, first, the individual advantages of the big ship, we have greater seaworthiness, more guns, better protection for hull, guns, and gun crews, greater height of guns above the water, and greater speed and radius of action. The big ship can have all these qualities in a superior degree to those of the small ship, simply because each one of them requires a smaller percentage of the total displacement of a large ship than of a small one. These advantages alone would be sufficient to determine victory, even if the fleet of small vessels had exactly the same number of guns as the fleet of large vessels (which of course it can not have for the same sum of money, as small vessels necessarily cost more per gun carried than large ones).

For example, suppose that four big vessels having a total broadside fire of forty 12-inch guns should be pitted against ten small vessels having the same total broadside fire, and further suppose that the small vessels should be allowed to choose such positions as to bring all their guns to bear upon the large enough to prevent the small vessels using some or their guns, while an those of the larger vessels, being higher above the water, could still be used.

The above are, however, but secondary advantages. Much the greatest superiority of a squadron of large vessels lies in the great tactical advantages that follow as a natural consequence of their individual superiority. This is due to their greater speed and the concentration of many guns in a short battle line. The superior speed of the big ships not only enables them to prevent the slower small vessels taking a position of advantage—for example, surrounding the big vessels—but it enables them to choose their own position—for example, at one end of the long line of small vessels. The vital nature of this advantage may be understood from the fact that the squadron of four big vessels would be about 1 mile long, while that of the small vessels would be over 2 miles long. Thus the big vessels, with their concentration of gun fire, could readily destroy the vessels at the head of the long column of small vessels, while the rear end of the column would be practically outside of effective range; and it may be remarked that if there were twenty instead of ten small vessels in line the rear of the column would be still farther out of range, and therefore could render no assistance whatever to the head of the column; and no conceivable superiority of tactical skill on the part of the commander in chief of the small vessels could prevent his squadron being destroyed in detail.

Incidentally, the ten small vessels would cost about 75 per cent more than the four large ones, and the annual expense for maintenance would be more than twice as much. Therefore the most efficient of the two fleets would cost during the lifetime of the vessels not more than one-half as much as the less efficient fleet.

From the above ties, I believe, clear that the most effective and cheapest way of increasing our naval force is to spend the available money in building large battle ships. For exa for a larger number of smaller ships, each carrying a less number of guns.

Similarly, we would obtain a still greater fighting efficiency at a still less cost by mounting these sixty guns on five ships carrying twelve guns each—that is, we would save about $10,000,000 on the original cost of the squadron and have a more efficient fleet, not to mention that the annual expense of maintaining it would be nearly one million less than that of the six ten-gun ships—and it would require less officers and men to man the more efficient fleet.

The same principle holds good for vessels of still larger displacement and greater gun power, the general statement of the principle being that the greater is their battle efficiency and the less the cost, per 12-inch gun, both for the construction of the ships that carry the guns and for their maintenance in service—the only limit of size being the draft of water in the harbors that the vessels must use in time of war.

But one more point need be touched upon, namely, the familiar arguments concerning the homogeneity of the units of the fleet, and the relative unwieldiness of large vessels.

These arguments are as old as naval warfare, and while they were sound in the day when ships were propelled by oars or sails, they ceased to have weight with the advent of steam propulsion, which renders each ship capable of turning in the same space as the least handy ship in the fleet. Moreover, the greater engine power of the larger ships, and the disposition of their rudder and turbine propellers, renders them at least as handy as ordinary battle ships, as the British Dreadaought has amply proved by her trials. The so-called "homogeneity" of a fleet is therefore but a phrase left over from the last century, and there can be no doubt that, for the reasons given above, any fleet or squadron of battle ships will be rendered stronger by the addition of two 20,000 ton ships than by the addition of such smaller vessels as can be built for the sum that the larger ships will cost.

[Mr. MEYER addressed the committee. See Appendix.]

Mr. MEYER. Mr. Chairman, I yield one hour of time to the

Mr. MELER. Mr. Chairman, I yield one nour of time to the gentleman from Florida [Mr. LAMAR].

Mr. LAMAR. Mr. Chairman, in the hour allotted to me I desire to address the committee upon the subject of the grave defects in the Hepburn railroad rate bill. I am sorry that the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce is not present. I shall read a clipping of recent date from a newspaper, as follows:

There will be no additional rate legislation at the present session, according to the views of lawyers in both the Senate and House. They say that everything possible was accomplished last session, and that it will take years of operation and tests in the courts to sift that law and ascertain whether it is effective to meet the evils that had been complained of in regard to discriminations and rebates.

If this is the view of the House and of the Senate, and if that be the view of the American Congress upon this great railroad trust problem, then I respectfully enter my individual and, as far as I can, my Representative protest. Such a posiand, as far as I can, my representative protest. Such a posi-tion upon such a great question, upon such defective legisla-tion, would be well for a board of railway presidents or rail-way traffic managers, but scarcely would be a credit to a great national legislature dealing with a question as yet only less than half settled. The distinguished junior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. La Follette] voiced what should be the sentiments of all persons upon this great problem when, last year, and be-fore the Hepburn rate bill became a law, and at his place in the Senate, with reference to this bill, he used this language:

the Senate, with reference to this bill, he used this language:

This bill, when it becomes a law, will not put this question at rest. It can not. When Congress merely clothes the Commission with power to ascertain whether rates are relatively equal and withholds from it all authority and all means of determining whether those rates are just and reasonable, it can not be expected that such inadequate legislation will solve this great problem and satisfy the public demand for not only equal but also just and reasonable rates.

The question which this bill should settle, but does not settle, will be a live issue in the next campaign for the election of men to both branches of Congress who will stand for a full measure of relief from oppressive transportation abuses.

So long as the legislation relative to the common carriers of this country permits these corporations to increase their capital stock without limit, increase it without adding anything of value to their properties, and increase it solely with the purpose of fixing rates upon that inflated capitalization, in order to pay profits and dividends to those holding the stocks and bonds, in which they have no real investment, just so long this question will be a vital issue before the American people.

These are the views of a great Republican statesman.

These are the views of a great Republican statesman.

Now, what is the attitude of parties upon this question in this House? There are conservative Republicans and there are conservative Democrats; there are progressive reform or radical Republicans; there are progressive or radical reform Democrats. It is all a question of opinion, but the line of demarcation is too plain in this House not to be perceived. I speak first of the Republicans. I quote from the Washington Herald of January 22d instant:

GLIMPSES OF REPUBLICAN CONSERVATISM.

We discern in the attitude of numerous Republican statesmen in and out of Congress the outlines of a conservative national policy, with these leading features.

Among others, Mr. Chairman, I call attention to this one:

Railroads-let 'em alone

Now, Mr. Chairman, the people of my district have no opposi-tion to railroads merely as railroads. Southern capital, northern capital, eastern capital, and western capital is engaged in building railroads in the district I represent at this very moment. Would I interpose the slightest bar to the progress of a single mile of railroad being built in my district? If I did that, I would be a discredit to the place and position which I hold.

The people in sections of my district where railroad whistles have never been heard will hear them in a very short time, and out of vast forests of yellow pine the sawmills will be shipping the products of the people to the markets of the world. Agriculture will thrive on lands now laying waste. The people of my district are as intelligent as the people of any other district. They want capital; they want incorporated capital; but, Mr. Chairman, they want incorporated capital in railroads that will prescribe just and reasonable rates for services rendered. They do not want unjust and unreasonable rates for the service rendered; and they do not want every mile of that railroad trebled and quadrupled in capitalization over and above its real value, and then the country through which these railroads pass taxed and the transportation taxed in order to pay profits on a valuation made by a printing press, in the shape of overcapitalized and fictitious stocks and over-capitalized and fictitious bonds. There is exactly where I draw the line upon railroad corporations, and where the people of The line upon railroad corporations, and where the people of Florida draw the line upon railroads. There is no injustice in that position. Now, Mr. Chairman, let me call the attention of the committee to some facts of which they may be aware. I never read them myself without being amazed at the stupendous financial and political proposition that the American people will have to settle finally with the great "railroad trust," as I call it, in the United States.

The railway capitalization in the United States is something over $13,000,000,000 and the railway mileage in the United States is about 220,000 miles. Six groups of men own 164,000 miles out of this total mileage of 220,000 miles. Let me read the groups. There is the Vanderbilt group, the Pennsylvania group, the Morgan-Hill group, the Gould-Rockefeller group, the Harriman group, the Moore group, and the Sante Fe. Out of this total mileage of 220,000 miles, I repeat, they own 164,000 miles, and out of the total capitalization of over thirteen billions they own nine billions and more. In 1898 Mr. Hobson, one of the greatest of English economists, wrote in his Evolution of Modern Capitalism.

The rapidity with which the whole raliway system is passing into the hands of great monopolist syndicates, with the necessary result of stifling competition, is in some respects the most momentous eco-nomic movement in the United States at the present time.

Moody on Trusts, an authoritative work upon that subject, on page 491, declares as follows:

The Standard influence is felt-

Meaning thereby the Standard Oil Company-

quite forcefully in all the railroad groups, and this influence is showing a steady growth throughout the entire steam railroad field. It is now freely predicted in Wall street that the next decade will see the Rockefeller interests the single dominating force in the world of railway finance and control.

In a book I have in my hand, designated "Railways, Trusts, and the People," by Prof. Frank Parsons, an authority upon these matters, he states as follows, on page 13:

Whatever may be the true number of our railroad kings, it is beyond question that a very few men have power to control our railway rates, and that still fewer will control them if the present processes of consolidation and combination continue. The managers of six big systems control three-fourths of the country and five-sixths of the traffic and indirectly dominate almost all the rest. The six big groups are growing into one. The railway empire looms huge and powerful out of the mists that shroud the future.

In the conclusion of the chapter devoted to the subject of the "Railway empire," he uses this language:

the "Railway empire," he uses this language:

The motives that impel men to build these giant combines by consolidation or coordination relate partly to the economies and transportation benefits of union and partly to the personal profit and power of those who control the combines. The first motive and its consequences are in line with the public good. In so far as combination eliminates the wastes of conflict and secures the benefits of harmonious cooperation in the railway service, it is a gain to the community. But in so far as it conduces to the financial ascendency of Wall street and intensifies the commercial supremacy and industrial dominion of a few great capitalisis, it is a political, industrial, and social danger. The railways united form a much more extensive interest than the Government from an economic point of view. Aiready they outrank our State governments and dominate the political affairs of sovereign Commonwealths, and as a unit in the hands of a gigantic trust they might even overshadow and control the National Government itself.

Mr. Chairman, I cite those figures and I quote that language

Mr. Chairman, I cite those figures and I quote that language to impress upon this committee and, so far as my remarks may be read in the Congressional Record, upon the mind of the country at large the vast, comprehensive, powerful question raised for settlement by the American people under the title of the "railway trust."

Who will settle this great question? Some political party will. Will the Republican party, under the lead of President Roosevelt and those influences which he has set in motion, settle this great question? Or will the party to which I belong, under the lead of some great Democrat like William Jennings Bryan, settle this question? The American people will adopt as their instrument for this settlement either the Democratic or the Republican Each of those political parties might as well take notice that that particular party which promises the most adequate settlement is the political party that the American people will designate as their agent to effect this settlement. It may be the political party to which I belong, and it may not be. That will depend upon the Democratic party.

Upon this railway question the Republicans have occupied a fairly advanced position, owing to the "big stick" at the other end of the avenue. I do not believe it is unfair to state as to the Republican party that they were never much in the mood, and have not been in the past nine years, to effect a settlement of this question. It has been alone in the power of the Republican party for ten years to settle this question at any time. They have had the Senate and House and control absolutely. The Interstate Commerce Commission have, for nearly ten years past, laid upon the very desks of these Members, put it under their eyes, so that they could not escape it if they would, evidence of gross railway wrongs and gross railway transgressions upon the commerce of this country; and the Republicans for nine years, since 1897, have sat in this Chamber dumb as the Egyptian Sphinx.

I declared two years ago, in a speech I made upon this question, that this House, under the control of the Republican party, would have sat here for twenty years longer and given no relief touching this vital transportation question if President Roosevelt had not thrown it like a bomb on the floor of this House and compelled them to notice it. I think that statement is a fair and just one. The Republicans have persistently ignored it since 1897, when the Supreme Court of the United States by its decision knocked the life out of the Interstate Commerce Commission in the "maximum-rate decision." They have remained silent and have not raised a hand until two years ago. They passed the inadequate Esch-Townsend bill two years ago and the insufficient Hepburn bill last year.

I say that measure of legislation does not go all the way; it does not begin to go one-half of the way; and I shall call the attention of the committee and of my colleagues on both sides of this House to what I think to be the gross defects of the Hepburn railway rate bill. I call it by that name, because it is generally so termed.

That was a bill that was passed on the floor of this House almost unanimously. It was brought in by the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, not under a rule cutting off amendments, but under an agreement by the committee to discourage amendments, and encouraging the voting them down, both by Democrats and Republicans. That bill went out of this House with the same solidarity as it came from the committee, without any amendments, no amendment being adopted while the bill was being made up in Committee of the Whole. But a number of vital and remedial amendments, some of which I shall speak of now, were offered and were voted down by a combined vote of Democrats and Republicans.

Mr. Chairman, what is the first defect in the Hepburn railroad-rate bill? It is this. The present law empowers the Interstate Commerce Commission to correct an unjust rate of freight, and to substitute in lieu of an unjust rate a just and reasonable rate. But before the Commission can make an order to that effect there must be a formal complaint by some shipper in the United States who alleges himself to have been injured by the alleged unjust and unreasonable freight rate.

Now, I contend that if this House had shrewdly made a law going to a certain extent to the merits of the railway question, and appealing to the public at large as carrying some relief, but determined not to go the whole length of remedial legislation, they could not have devised, had that been their intention, a shrewder law for the aid of railroads than they did by that very provision in the bill. Every shipper in this country is to some extent at the mercy of the railroad companies. Every shipper dreads the power of discrimination on the part of the railroad company; and that defect in this bill, not to give the Interstate Commerce Commission power to correct an unreasonable, unjust rate, and wrong, of its own motion and upon its own initiative, is a bar and deterrent and threat to the shippers of this country who may desire to complain of being discriminated against by railroad extortion and exaction. not blame the shipper for hesitating to complain against the He will yield a right for a long time before he will get to the point of making a complaint, as he has learned from long experience that the railroads will sooner or later have him at their mercy, and that the railroads have long memories. But the American Congress should do what is right by way of amendment and give the Interstate Commerce Commission the power to correct injustices done to American shippers upon its own initiative—shield the shipper. Give to the Interstate Com-merce Commission full power to take the responsibility. They are the Government's agents. They should be invested with that power; and there is where the responsibility ought to be to the public.

In October, 1906. I had the pleasure of seeing something of the last campaign in the State of New York for the governor-

A Member of this House from New York, Hon. WILLIAM RANDOLPH HEARST, was the nominee of the regular Democratic State convention. He introduced into this House in 1904 a very far-reaching and remedial bill upon railway rate regulation.

There was another candidate in that State for governor, a very eminent Republican, and, I have no doubt, a most excellent and worthy man, the present Governor Hughes. When Mr. Hearst made his canvass he wrote out a statement, signing his name to it, declaring for every specific measure for which he would stand if he was elected governor. I will not say that Governor Hughes was foxy, because I do not think he is of a foxy nature. But he declined to take an altogether open stand upon the railway-corporation question. It may be that a Republican did not know exactly what line of reform he would take if he became governor of New York; but, at any rate, he declared in a general way to the people of that State that if he was elected governor he would stand for all proper remedial legislation upon this great railway-trust question. Now, I have not his message immediately before me, but I have read it, and one of the first things that that Republican governor recommends very recently to the New York legislature is to give to the State railway commission power to correct all railway inequalities and discriminations and unjust rates upon its own initiative. That power resides in the State railway-commission law of Florida and of Georgia and of Texas, if I am not mistaken, and of other States, States of which the members of the Interstate Commerce Committee are residents and Representatives, and yet, at the last session, they reported a bill into this House which was imperfect and inadequate, as shown by the laws of the very States they represent, in that they refused to give to the Interstate Commerce Commission the power to correct railway wrongs and abuses upon the initiative of that Commission. Oh, the power of "conservatism!"

I pass to the second defect of the Hepburn bill, as I think it. Why should the railroads of the country, that are now operating thousands upon thousands of rates all over this great country, assume to raise a rate at their own sweet will? There should be a limitation on the power of railway companies to increase their freight rates at will.

There should be a provision in the law that no railway company shall increase an existing railway freight or passenger rate or charge without the consent of the Interstate Commerce Commission. I offered this amendment to the Hepburn rate bill in Committee of the Whole. Democrats and Republicans alike voted it down.

Years ago President McKinley appointed what was called the "Industrial Commission," composed of four United States Senators, four Members of this House, and ten prominent business men selected from all parts of the United States. testimony upon this very question of railway discriminations and abuses, covering a period of a year or two, they finally reported to Congress, and among their recommendations to Congress, made years ago to the Fifty-seventh Congress, was this: That no railroad should increase an existing rate or freight charge without the consent of the Interstate Commerce Com-They cited a case of robbery, pure and simple, that happened in the State of Florida, in the district which my colleague [Mr. Clark] has the honor to represent. In a night, in 1889 or 1890, between suns, the entire railway forces operating in the peninsula, in the orange belt of Florida, increased their rates of freight on oranges from 30 cents a box to 40 cents a box, an increase in one night of 331 per cent. The language of the Industrial Commission was that they had practically extorted out of the orange shippers in a brief time hundreds of thousands of dollars. The lack of such a provision as that in the Hepburn bill is a great defect. What happened in Florida years ago has happened in thousands of instances before that time and since that time on thousands of articles of freight throughout the

I will quote here the language of the Industrial Commission about the Florida orange extortion to illustrate forcibly the defect I have referred to in the Hepburn railway rate bill:

The entire inadequacy of making rate regulation dependent upon the mere determination of rates as applied in the past without reference to the rates which shall prevail in the fature is apparent on all sides. More than this, all remedy for the parties who have borne the burden of an unreasonable rate would seem to have been removed. This has been clearly described in the report of the Commission for 1897. It may be illustrated by the example of rates upon oranges. In 1890 there was a sudden advance on rates from Florida to New York from 30 to 40 cents. The Commission after an investigation ordered that the rate be reduced to 35 cents. As a matter of fact, how could this action redress grievances of those who had already paid 40 cents per box?

the rate be reduced to 55 cents. As a matter of any did 40 cents per box?

It was difficult, in the first place, to discover who bore the burden of the unreasonable charge; and, in the second place, it was certain that some of those who suffered could not legally sue in court. The actual shipper, who alone could sue for repayment of unreasonable charges, was a middleman, who recouped himself in any event, either from the grower, the consumer, or both. He lost nothing by reason of the unreasonable rate. As a matter of fact, not any single individual, but the locality had been muicted by 5 cents per 100 pounds, supposing that a rate of 40 cents was unreasonable. Experience shows that almost no shippers or other parties injured actually attempt to secure the restitution of moneys already paid for unreasonable charges. In only 5 out of 225 cases down to 1897 was a rebate actually sought, and in those cases $100 was the maximum sought to be recovered. As a matter of fact, the damage inflicted by the existence of such an unreasonable rate could not be measured by hundreds or perhaps by hundreds of thousands of dollars. The bearing of this citation is to show that any effectual protection to the shipper must proceed from adjudication of the reasonableness of rates before, and not after, they have been paid—that is to say, in advance of their exaction by the carrier. Power to pass upon the reasonableness of such rates prior to their enforcement, as a consequence, constitutes practically the only safeguard which the shipping public may enjoy.

I shall state the third serious defect in the Hepburn rate bill. It does not give to the Interstate Commerce Commission any power over the freight classifications of the railroads. What is the power of freight classification as it now exists in the hands of the interstate railroads? It is the insidious, devious, crooked, adroit device of changing the classifications of articles of freight shipped over their lines of road, and by this means indirectly increasing freight rates. Everyone knows that three great railway classifications of freight exist in this country, the western, the eastern (I think), and the southern. There are thousands of those classes in each one of those great systems. All the railroads have to do whenever they want to raise more money out of the shippers and the public is to move, singly or in groups or by hundreds or thousands, articles of freight shipped over their lines of railway from a low class to a higher class, and the deed is done. The Interstate Commerce Commission for years past have called the attention of Congress to this great evil and asked that Congress give to it power over classification of freight to check this extortion.

Mr. Chairman, the Interstate Commerce Commission has repeatedly for the last nine years called the attention of this Congress to this very shifty and odious method of increasing the extortionate profit of railways in this country through the devious and tricky device of freight classification. This Congress (nor past Congresses) has paid no attention to these Commission reports. The Interstate Commerce Commission might try the moon. The "man in the moon" may at least see the evils, though powerless to correct them. And that same Industrial Commission, composed of Senators and Members of this House and great business men, selected by President Mc-Kinley for their character, standing, and ability, reported on this very question to the Fifty-seventh Congress, calling their attention to the fact that the shippers in America were swindled by this extortionate form of insidious railway robberythat railroads, by shifting from a lower class to a higher class thousands of articles of freight, have succeeded in raising their extortionate and unlawful earnings.

Mr. Chairman, at or near the very time that the Hepburn railway rate bill was being considered in this House a convention of State railway commissioners was being held in this city. Now, what did that convention declare upon this question of freight classification? That convention passed the following resolu-

Resolved. That it is the sense of this convention that Congress enact a law requiring the railroads engaged in interstate commerce throughout the United States to, within two years after the passage of such act, prepare and adopt a uniform classification of freight articles; and in case they failed to do so within the time required that the Interstate Commerce Commission at once proceed to make such classification, and when so made by such Commission the same shall be the legal classification for interstate shipments.

That the secretary forward a copy of this report to the Senate and

That the secretary forward a copy of this report to the Senate and House of Representatives, and call their attention to the former reports of this association on this subject.

They not only requested the secretary to call attention of the American Congress to this particular defect in the legislation, but, with a species of exquisite irony, to call the attention of the American Congress to their former reports in past years upon this defect. But there was no such provision placed in the Hepburn railway bill, that was the joint product on the floor of this House of the Republican and Democratic parties. Mr. Chairman, in 1897 the Interstate Commerce Commission, in the very year in which the Supreme Court completely destroyed the power of the Interstate Commerce Commission as to rate making, as far back as ten years ago, the paid experts of the Federal Government, men of high character, men who know far more than the Members of this House, about this intricate subject-that Commission recommended ten years ago in their official report that that body be empowered to order a uniform classification of freight upon all the railways in the United States. And still Congress has never done it. I quote from their report to Congress in 1897:

These considerations of the necessity for reform in this regard, the universal demand for a uniform classification, the ten years of appeal to the carriers, by the Commission and by Congress, to adopt a consolidated and single system for the whole country, the "representations" by the carriers themselves, their former efforts to that end, the energy at one time displayed by them, and the apparent apathy that marks their attitude toward the subject to-day, all lead the Commission to the reflewed recommendation that Congress provide for such uniformity by prompt and appropriate legislation. Carriers subject to the act should be required within a specified time, not longer than one year, to prepare, publish, and file with the Commission a uniform classification of freight as the basis of rates for the transportation of property in the United States, and the Commission should be authorized and directed, upon investigation from time to time, to make such amendments as may appear to be reasonable and necessary. In case the rallroads refuse or neglect within the time specified to comply with this direction, the Commission should be authorized and required to prepare such classification, the adoption of which by all carriers subject to regulation shall be made compulsory by suitable penalty. In view of the continued nonaction of the carriers, and the action already had in Congress, it might be the wiser course to pass the bill now pending in the Senate.

A member of the State railway commission in Florida. Hon-

A member of the State railway commission in Florida, Hon. R. Hudson Burr, addressing me by letter about the time the Hepburn bill was pending last year, and urging me to get a provision into the bill if possible giving the Interstate Commerce Commission this power over freight classification of rail roads, used this language:

I see that it gives no supervision whatever over the classification. While this bill may prevent the railroads from raising or lowering a rate or freight tariff, it will amount to very little if the railroads are to be the sole judges of classification, for that has always been the favorite instrument in their hands for tampering with rates. It is possible to change whole tariffs almost by use of the classification, and it is done.

For instance, the Florida railroad commission, when it first organized, adopted what was known as "southern classification No. 25" as the Florida classification. In about two years' time the southern classification had been changed until something like 500 articles in classification No. 25 had been raised, and at that time the railroad commission revised the Florida classification, placing back the articles thus raised by the railroads, and adopted what was known as the "Florida classification No. 1," and now we find that again each year, when the traffic managers have met for the purpose of going over these matters, they have raised items in the southern classification until it differs materially from our classification. If they used the Florida classification on interstate shipments into Florida, it would not affect us so badly; but where the southern classification is higher they use it, and if in a remote case an item should be higher in the Florida classification they would use that. In other words, they use that which results in the highest rate.

It seems to me that it would be a farce to pass a bill enlarging the powers of the Interstate Commerce Commission in which they were given the right, where complaint is made of the unreasonableness of a rate, and after hearing, etc., to substitute in lieu thereof a just and reasonable rate, to leave the classification entirely in the hands of the classification to the same extent that they are given supervision over the rate; that is, where an article is classed in a manner to make it unreasonable and unjust, that upon complaint, investigation, and hearing the Commission should have the right, if found to be as complained of, to substitute in lieu thereof a reasonable

Mr. Chairman, if these were disputed questions, if these were delicate questions of prospective legislation upon which men naturally differed in sentiment and opinion, if these matters were to some extent new to the country, there would be some excuse for this House and the Senate of the United States to hesitate.

It might be called "experimental legislation;" it might be called "legislation in untrod and new paths," but I affirm that when the Congress passes a railway rate bill and omits this power over classification of freight, urged upon their attention for years past by the Industrial Commission and the Interstate Commerce Commission, then there can be no excuse for such omission. Besides all this, many of the Members on the Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee represent States that have given to their State railway commissions this very vital power over the classification of freight. Such is the law in Iowa, the home of the chairman of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce. Such is the law also in the States of Georgia, Texas, Louisiana, Ohio, Minnesota, Washington, Illinois, and possibly other States having representation on this great committee. Are these gentlemen unwilling to grant to the people as to interstate lines of railroads what has been granted in their own States?

The spirit of "conservatism" is still powerful with some members of the Democratic and Republican parties.

Mr. Chairman, I come now to the question of overcapitaliza-tion of the great railroads of this country. In the Senate of the United States last year, when the Hepburn bill had passed out of this House and was being debated on the floor of the Senate, the junior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] offered an amendment that was far-reaching upon this great question of railroad trusts. His amendment was that the Interstate Commerce Commission be authorized and empowered and directed, through competent engineering skill, to take the value of every railroad mile in the United States relating to interstate com-merce—all of their rights of way, their depots, terminals, crossties, iron, culverts, trestling, everything that related to the physical value, rolling stock and all, estimated mile by mile and dollar for dollar-and that those engineers should be employed and hired and paid for by the Federal Government.

Mr. Chairman, the purpose of that amendment was obvious. Should a man be allowed, upon a $5,000 store—in the twinkling of an eye by merely writing a value across its face—to make it a $20,000 store, and thus enact in lieu of the reasonable rent of that $5,000 property the extortionate rent of a $20,000 prop-What citizen would submit to such extortion? I affirm that the railroads of this country, east, north, south, and west, on the authority of competent engineering testimony-not my own-on the authority of high public writers on this question, are uniformly overcapitalized to at least double their in many cases at three and four times their value. What does this mean? If that be true, it means that every pound of freight of every character of freight, from Maine to California, from Michigan to Florida, is paying a disproportionate tax for the railway service rendered. In practice and in spirit that is a tyranny and an exaction and a deliberate fraud upon the shippers of this country. And when the views of men like William J. Bryan, and the views of a Republican like the junior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. La Follette] finds voice and expression in legislative action, that amendment of the junior Senator from Wisconsin will be enacted as the law of this country. How did the vote stand on that amendment in the Every Democrat voted for it, every Republican except the junior Senator from Wisconsin voted against it. Let me advert a minute to this question of overcapitalization. Governor Hughes, of New York, became in my opinion a very great reform Republican governor, after William R. Hearst got sharp-ly behind him with a platform signed by himself, pledged to these specific reforms. Lately, on December 13 last, in the city of Rochester, in the State of New York, the governor-elect, Hughes, was a guest at the annual banquet of the Chamber of What did he say on this question of overcapitali-Commerce. zation, speaking of the people of the United States?

They do not wish confiscation. They desire those who invest in these enterprises to have a fair return upon their investments. They will not tolerate efforts to make the public pay dividends on watered

Is not that great, coming from a Republican governor? I yield my praise to Governor Hughes. A Republican who can write that in a message to a legislature or say it anywhere in this broad land is entitled to Democratic thanks. It is a docthis broad land is entitled to Democratic thanks. It is a dectrine to which neither the Republican party nor any of its leading public men have been much inclined. Governor Hughes might have started a little earlier in this campaign of reform. I want to read something relative to overcapitalization of railroads in the State of New York, occurring many years ago, and it comes from high and competent authority. Prof. Parsons, a competent authority on the matter, testifying before the Industrial Commission five or six years ago, stated as follows:

Industrial Commission five or six years ago, stated as follows:

The prevalence of water in the railroad system is so well known that it is not necessary to do more than touch upon the matter. Vanderbilt set the pace in consolidating the eleven roads between Albany and Buffalo and increased the capitalization by nearly $9,000,000 in doing it, then added 50 per cent to the stock capitalization of the Hudson road, of which he was president; then extending his control over the Central and adopting the same tactics there he added 80 per cent to the New York Central; then he consolidated the two roads, and in doing it inflated the Central 27 per cent more and the Hudson 85 per cent; so that in the four years from 1866 to 1870 he brought the capitalization up from $54,000,000, which was a little more than the total cost on the books of the company—about $4,000,000 more—to $103,000,000. The total cost on the books in 1870 was under $70,000 per mile, while under his capitalization it was $122,000 per mile.

That example has been followed to a great extent all over the country, so that our railroad capitalization is now about half water, or water and wind. The figures of construction and equipment cost given in Poor's Manual from time to time indicate that the railroads of the United States are capitalized at about double what they could be built and equipped for at the present time.

What does that mean? That every pound of freight that has

What does that mean? That every pound of freight that has been shipped throughout the great State of New York, manufacturing and agricultural, for twenty-five, thirty, or forty years, has been subject to extortionate, illegal, unlawful railway overcharges.

Let me cite the facts as to some of the railroads in the State of Florida upon this subject of overcapitalization.

Take the Atlantic Coast Line Railroad in that State. It is capitalized at $28,835 per mile.

The Carrabelle, Tallahassee and Georgia Railroad at $28,600 per mile.

The Florida East Coast Railroad at $28,470 per mile. The Georgia, Southern and Florida Railroad at $25,280 per

And, to cap the climax, the Seaboard Air Line Railroad at $48,417 per mile.

No competent railway engineer would say that it would cost more than $15,000 per mile to build and completely equip either of the above-named railroads, including rolling stock and all. In these railroads, and especially in the case of the Seaboard Air Line Railroad, what does this large difference of value represent?

It represents bonds and stocks, upon which the shippers of Florida, the producers and consumers, are paying taxes in the shape of freight and passenger fares which they should not pay.

This is a vital question to the shippers of Florida. I desire to quote from the statement of Hon. William S. West, of Valdosta, Ga., before the Florida State railroad commission a year or two ago. He is, or recently has been, president of the Georgia State senate. He is a man of high character, of social position, and wealth. He was seeking to have lumber rates reduced in Florida or cars furnished or asking some regulation as to lumber cars. I quote his remarks in part. He possessed large lumber and milling interests in Florida:

Now, let us look at the railroads to see whether they have been prosperous or not. I had some statistics, which I left at the hotel, but the tonnage of the past year is largely increased over former years. Look at the Atlantic Coast Line Railroad, declaring a dividend of 25 per cent. An outrage, gentlemen, to extort from a poor people for a railroad, permanent, an investment that is permanent and that must necessarily increase in value as the country is populated, to make 25 per cent of the investment and crying for a larger increase in the rate that they must futher extort it from the people of the country. That is the result. Then they say they can not live without it.

I want, gentlemen, to be fair to the railroads. This vast country would be a desolation without them. They ought to be permitted to live. They ought to have a fair compensation on the capital invested, but taking the State of Georgia—for I don't know what it is here—where the railroads have a capital of anywhere from $45,000 to $63,000 per mile, stock and other things, they come before you and say 'We are not making but 4 per cent or 5 per cent, as the case may be, on that capitalization.' Bring it down to what it ought to be, at $12,000 or $15,000 at the outside, and they are making 16 to 20 per cent. Is it fair to the people that they should bear the brunt of watered stock? They water the stock, they take it and put it down into their pockets, and then say that they are not making enough on the capital invested. That is the cry of the railroads.

The newspapers state that within the past month the Pennsylvania Railroad has leased 19,537 cars, being box, flat, and coal cars, for ten years, and that the railroad will pay as the lease price one-tenth of the cost of the same per annum.

But let us see what the people of Florida are paying to the railroads for the use of their cars. From Monticello, Fla., to New York City the freight cost, in an ordinary box car, is about $125 per car for a carload of watermelons. The cost of this box car is about $600 to $800. It takes about four days to carry the melons from Monticello, Fla., to New York City. The Florida melon grower pays to the railroad 20 per cent of the value of the car for the rent of the car for the very short time of four days.

Take the case of the grower of cantaloupes at Monticello, Fla. The freight and icing charges (in a refrigerator car) to New York City and to western cities on a car of cantaloupes is more than $200. This refrigerator car costs from $800 to $1,000. Here we have 20 per cent rental for four days' use of the railroad or private-line car.

Is it any wonder that the people feel and know that they are extorted upon in railroad rates?

What applies to Monticello, Fla., also applies all over the State of Florida.

I desire now to discuss some who will administer this rate legislation. I speak now of the Federal judges. I have as much respect for most of the members of the Federal judiciary as any man in the United States. I have no doubt that in the main they are men of a high class, of high character, of intelligence, and morality, but there are, sir, some corrupt men in every group of men, and there are some corrupt ones in the Federal judiciary. We have one of them in the State of Florida. Mr. Chairman, every man in the land who knows anything should honor and respect a court if the court is honorable and respectable, but there should be no such thing as a judge imprisoning a man for contempt of his court when the entire State has a profound contempt for that judge. I say it is unfortunate for the State of Florida; it is unfortunate for that judge; it is unfortunate for the Federal judiciary, that there is such a judge as Charles Swayne. It was fortunate for the country that the Republicans of this House combined with the Democrats to im-peach him at the bar of the Senate for high crimes and misdemeanors. It was unfortunate for Florida that the court of impeachment, the Senate of the United States, failed to convict Judge Swayne. I stated in the debate in this House, speaking to impeach Judge Swayne, that he was the most lawless man in the State of Florida. It was true then and it is true now. Mr. Chairman, I am brought to speak of this judge not because I would like to revive the discussion of two years ago, but I am brought to discuss it because I think it is proper and necessary. Litigation is now progressing in the Federal courts in Florida between the Florida State railroad commission and certain railroads.

I desire first to speak of Judge Swayne and his relations to and with the Florida railroads. He is a railroad judge. In my opinion he sells his decisions and his opinions to them.

opinion he sells his decisions and his opinions to them.

In 1892 the Florida Central and Peninsular Raliroad, in the State of Florida, filed its bill to enjoin the collection of $96,000 of back taxes upon its constituent lines of road, which had been levied upon on behalf of the State of Florida. The litigation lasted for quite a number of years. The supreme court of Florida finally settled every State question involved in the litigation in favor of the claim of the State for back taxes. The case was carried to the Supreme Court of the United States by the railroad company.

There, so eminent an attorney as the Hon. Wayne MacVeagh argued all the Federal questions involved on behalf of the railroad company. The Supreme Court of the United States decided all Federal questions raised adversely to the railroad company and affirmed the judgment of the supreme court of the State of Florida.

The whole proceeding was a direct proceeding between the State of Florida and the railroad company for the collection of a debt, viz, taxes, which, under the decision of the two courts, was the highest obligation resting on the property of the railroad company.

And yet, in the face of both of these court decisions, Judge Charles Swayne, United States district judge for the northern district of Florida, enjoined the State of Florida, through its comptroller, from selling under levy the property of this railroad company and collecting its just debt against it.

And the injunction he issued against the comotroller was issued on behalf of the Central Trust Company of New York, which held the bonds of the railroad company.

The action of Judge Swayne was "government by injunction." about which we have heard considerable complaint in late years. The suit on behalf of the Central Trust Company was purely a dilatory proceeding and a mere constructive proceeding to hold the State off from its just rights in the matter, to save to the railroad company the interest which would accrue by nonpayment of the amount due.

The State of Florida, by its attorney-general, submitted a demurrer to the bill filed by the Central Trust Company, and also interposed a plea of res adjudicata, setting up the decisions of the courts in favor of the State of Florida. The demurrer and pleas were argued before Judge Swayne by an able lawyer, then attorney-general of Florida, Hon. J. B. Whitfield, who is now a member of the Florida supreme court.

Judge Swayne overruled the demurrer and plea. An answer and replication were filed, but before the case ever went to a hearing the railroad attorneys, who had no confidence in their case, paid the full amount of $96,000 to the State of Florida. The railroad company, under Judge Swayne's injunction, had obtained two years' delay and was "in pocket" at least $10,000 in interest saved.

The railroad attorneys, on behalf of their railroad client, paid the amount to the State, not because they doubted Judge Swayne's decision in the matter in their favor, but they must have felt that such decision would have been promptly reviewed in the Supreme Court of the United States, and their whole proceeding of delay and obstruction would be thrown unceremoniously out of court, and that Judge Swayne in the flow of the court of the United States, and their whole proceeding of delay and obstruction would be thrown unceremoniously out of court, and that Judge Swayne might possibly have gotten a stinging rebuke from that tribunal. When all the delay practically possible had been obtained, then, of course, payment was made.

Eleven counties in Florida were entitled to about $50,000 of these back taxes. Some of these counties issued bon

And this same Florida Central and Peninsula Railroad-now the Seaboard Air Line Railroad—is the same one that in 1902 sent Judge Swayne and his family to California from Jacksonville, Fla., in a private car, and even sent along with them as rile, Fia., in a private car, and even sent along with them as cicerone the general passenger agent of the railroad. The railroad paid for everything except the provisions. This fact was sworn to on the impeachment of Judge Swayne by Hon. John Wurts, now professor of law in Yale University. In 1902 he was an attorney at law in Jacksonville, Fla. Judge Swayne still has years to sit upon that bench. In my opinion his administration of the law in that State is a menace to the true interests of the receipt of the State of Floridae. It holiers that interests of the people of the State of Florida. I believe that it is an impending menace. I believe that whenever the interests of the people of my district, and of the State of Florida, clash with railroad interests that then the peoples' interests are imperiled. I desire now to speak of Circuit Judge Don A. Pardee.

Within the last two or three years, Mr. Chairman, the State railway commissioners in the State of Florida sought to reduce the fares on what might be called almost a "trunk line," 160 the fares on what hight be called almost a miles long, in my district, belonging to the Louisville and Nashville Railroad—the Pensacola and Atlantic Railroad. The passenger fares mon that road are 4 cents per mile. The entire senger fares upon that road are 4 cents per mile. The passenger fares upon that road are 4 cents per mile. The entire sentiment of the country, all through the North and the West and the middle section of this country, is that these great railroads shall charge a flat fare of 2 cents a mile. Yet this railroad charges a high and, in my opinion, the wrongful price of 4 cents per mile for passenger fare. The State railway commissioners made an order cutting down those 4-cent-per-mile fares to a 3-cent-per-mile basis, and immediately that road sought the Federal court, just exactly as when a quail is flushed from the ground it seeks covert for its security. There were cities of refuge, I believe, in the olden days, and no matter what crime a man had committed, if he could only get into that city of refuge, he was saved from prosecution. And I say that the railways of this country when arraigned by the people of this country for wrongs and exactions seek the Federal courts as such cities of refuge. In a great many cases they seek them because they know in advance they have a friend in the judge and are safe when they get in the precincts and confines of his court. Many Federal judges have worn out by constant use many railroad free passes for themselves and their entire families. The Pensacola and Atlantic Railroad brought its bill of injunction to seek to enjoin the railway commissioners from enforcing that 3-cent rate. At a certain date the vice-president of the Louisville and Nashville Railroad, the railroad owning the Pensacola and Atlantic division in Florida, in order to get his railroad property reasonably taxed at the comptroller's office at the State capitol at Tallahassee, made an affidayit that the property was worth $1,700,000, and in the short space of sixty days after making that affidavit, in order to get a bill of injunction to enjoin the State railroad commission from enforcing that order from a 4-cent to a 3-cent rate, swore that the same property was worth $5,200,000. Judge Pardee instantly granted a preliminary injunction. It has never been dissolved, and the people of Florida are paying a 4-cent-per-mile rate, and that case is hung up in court for settlement for years to come.

Let me state the case as it was stated on the floor of the Senate by a Senator to whom the facts had been given in a letter by a distinguished lawyer in Florida:

The Florida railroad commission enforces its orders by mandamus instituted originally in the supreme court of the State, and yet Judge Pardee has enjoined the Florida railroad commission and all of the State officials from instituting suit in the supreme court of the State by mandamus to compel the Louisville and Nashville Railroad Company to reduce its passenger fare from 4 cents to 3 cents per mile in Florida, and this injunction was granted upon the affidavit of the vice-president of the Louisville and Nashville Railroad to the effect that the Louisville and Nashville property in Florida is worth at least $5,200,000—this high valuation being essential to their case—and the State produced an affidavit made by the same man one month and twenty-eight days prior to his swearing to the bill, in which affidavit he had sworn that the identical property was not worth exceeding $1,700,000; and yet on this man's affidavit the State was temporarily restrained from instituting mandamus proceedings in the supreme court of Florida to enforce compliance with the rate.

It does not follow that a reduction from 4 cents per mile to

It does not follow that a reduction from 4 cents per mile to 3 cents per mile would result in loss to the railroad. The contrary is often the case. The judgment of the State railroad commissioners is prima facie correct. Judge Pardee should not have interfered with that judgment, with the contradictory affidavits before him. The people of Florida have no confidence in Judge Pardee, nor his decisions, when the interests of the public clash with railroad interests. Judge Swayne is not only orrupt, but he is ignorant and tyrannical.

I cite his sentence of Samuel M. Clyatt, convicted in his court, in 1901 or 1902, of peonage. The indictment charged Clyatt that he "did * * * return one Will Gordon and one Clyatt that he "did * * * return one Will Gordon and one Mose Ridley to a condition of peonage, etc." The case was eventually carried by Clyatt's attorneys to the Supreme Court of the United States. That court reversed the judgment below. The Supreme Court, in its opinion, rendered by Mr. Justice Brewer, used this language as to the indictment and the evidence in the case:

* * There is not a scintilla of testimony to show that Gordon and Ridley were ever theretofore in a condition of peonage. That they were in debt and that they had left Georgia and gone to Florida without paying that debt, does not show that they had been held in a condition of peonage, or were ever at work willingly or unwillingly for their creditor. We have examined the testimony with great care to see if there was anything which would justify a finding of the fact, and can find nothing. No matter how severe may be the condemnation which is due to the conduct of a party charged with a criminal offense, it is the imperative duty of a court to see that all the elements of his crime are proved, or at least that testimony is offered which justifies a jury in finding those elements. Only in the exact administration of the law will justice in the long run be done, and the confidence of the public in such administration be maintained.

We are constrained, therefore, to order a reversal of the judgment, and remand the case for a new trial.

And after thus ignorantly permitting the jury to convict Clyatt he sentenced Clyatt to four years in a Federal prison, and, if my memory serves me correctly, imposed also a fine of Samuel M. Clyatt is a man of good character, a man of property, engaged, I think, in the turpentine business. This sentence of Clyatt by Judge Swayne far exceeds any sentence in a like case imposed in Georgia and Alabama by Federal Judges Speer or Jones. The motive of this excessive sentence of Clyatt lay in the fact that the parties alleged to have been returned to a state of peonage were negroes. Judge Swayne is a fanatic about the negroes' rights. He is and has been so fanatical about the negro race that in 1889 or 1890, being then in Jacksonville, Fla., he made himself as judge a party to a conspiracy to "stuff" the jury box with "true and tried Republicans" to try Democrats charged with "stuffing" the ballot box against negro voters or Republicans, which is almost the same thing in Florida. There are just about enough white Republicans in Florida to hold the Federal offices. Judge Swayne's course at that time in those political persecutions was so infamous that one of the attorneys in the case, afterwards Representative in Congress, Hon. Charles M. Cooper, made a withering reply to a remark of Judge Swayne:

There is a greater crime, your honor, than stuffing the ballot box, and that is the crime of stuffing the jury box.

With such Federal judges do the people of Florida have to deal in their personal and business relations.

Now, Mr. Chairman, a word to my party associates. In a sense this railway legislation is nonpolitical; but I affirm to my Democratic colleagues and friends that the placing of it in the national Democratic platform three times, in 1896 and in 1900 and in 1904, showed that the masses of the Democratic party in this country thought that more power should be placed in the hands of the Interstate Commerce Commission, and the Democratic masses of this country want full, comprehensive remedial legislation upon this great railway-trust question. And I affirm, and my position can be attested from the silence of the Republican party in their national platform, that the Republicans are not committed to this reform, and never agreed to it in spirit, and were reluctant to enact any portion of it into law.

Now, I say to my Democratic colleagues here, without any fault-finding, without any criticism, that we are all working for two things. First, the good of the country; second, to defeat the Republican party. How shall we ever defeat the Republican party upon any issue, especially upon this great railway-trust question, unless the Democratic party in this body proposes some measure, some more remedial, entirely remedial, and properly remedial measure than the Republican organization of this House will stand for?

I know we are solidly Democratic in the South, unless something inadvertent happens, like Missouri dropping into the Republican fold two years ago. I know that from Virginia to Texas the South is solidly Democratic. But it takes something more than Southern votes to elect a Democratic President. What will you do in the great North and West, in those great sections you do in the great North and West, in those great sections giving the electoral votes, in order to elect a Democratic President? In the last campaign for governor I was in the State of New York, and I heard something of it. Every Republican candidate for Congress said: "Send me back and I will support President Roosevelt in his reforms," and every Democrat said: "Send me to Congress and I will more fairly support his rail-road Democratic measures than Republicans." This was the burden of song in the canvass as evidenced by speeches and newspapers.

Now, I say that the proper place for a Democrat to accomplish those reforms is, in large part, on the floor of this House. I listened with pleasure to the able and eloquent speech of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Sheppard], lately made in this House. I cheered, as did other Democrats, the mention of the great name of Bryan. There is magic in the name.

But has the Democratic minority in this House framed a rail-road rate bill commensurate with known railway evils and such a full remedial measure as Mr. Bryan would endorse if he were present? I deny it. And yet Mr. Bryan has expressed the opinion that only eventually through Government ownership can the people of the United States settle this great railroad problem, this railway trust question. Poll the Democrats on this side, and what would they say on the Government-owner-ship proposition? They would say: "We do not go as far as Mr. Bryan does, and we do not advocate ownership, but we do advocate governmental regulation of the railroads; we do advo-cate their control by the Government." I say to the Democracy of this body, representing in part the great national Democratic party in the country, if you deny to Mr. Bryan your support and your voice and your sympathy with Government ownership of railroads, then, in order to be logical, you must give him the benefit of full remedial legislation looking to governmental regu-lation and the control of railroads. Otherwise your conduct, if it is not insincere, is indefensible. I affirm that the national Democracy have a right to look to the Democrats in this House and to the Senate for leadership upon this great question. All the things looking to full remedial legislation or Government regulation of railroads you must adopt if you want to be just to yourselves and just to Mr. Bryan.

I introduced into this House, February 7th instant, an act to amend the "Hepburn rate bill."

It seeks to give the Interstate Commerce Commission the following powers over interstate railroads:

(1) To fix just and reasonable rates of railroad charges upon its own initiative.

(2) To prevent a railroad from increasing an existing rate without the consent of the Interstate Commerce Commission.

(3) To prescribe a uniform classification of freight and traffic throughout the United States,

(4) To ascertain the true value of interstate railroads, so as to fix the true basis for prescribing just and reasonable rates.

(5) To make rules and regulations to secure the safety of railway employees, and make all rules and regulations relating to the physical equipment of railroads and its safety for the public, and all rules and regulations as to division of cars among patrons, and matters relating to reciprocal demurrage of cars between shipper and carrier—these are all embraced under the comprehensive language of the bill.

I attach a copy of the bill to these remarks; also a copy of a letter from W. D. Marks, an authority upon that subject, as to the value of railroads in the United States.

Much has been said and written lately about the "car fam-ine" or "car shortage" in the United States. Some of it is due, no doubt, to increased traffic. But much of it proceeds from two reasons:

A desire to make the railway rate legislation unpopular. (2) The cars have been largely given to favored shippersfriends of the high railway officials. The other patrons of the railroads have been left "out in the cold."

A still greater reason, perhaps, is that the owners of railroads have pocketed the earnings of the railroads upon their "wind and water" stocks and bonds and have let the equipment of their roads "run down." That is nearer the truth of the matter

A Member in this House from New York [Mr. Hearst] placed in the rate bill he introduced in 1904 a very valuable provision; one that would largely have prevented the present "car short-It is as follows:

That whenever any common carrier, subject to the provisions of this act, shall fail or refuse, after reasonable notice, to furnish cars to shippers for the transportation of freight as interstate commerce, or to forward and deliver such freight at destination within a reasonable time, such failure or refusal shall be deemed to constitute unjust discrimination and undue and unreasonable prejudice and disadvantage, and in any case or proceeding pending before the Commission or any circuit or district court of the United States based upon such failure or refusal on the part of any such common carrier, proof that in the furnishing of cars or forwarding or delivery of its traffic other shippers have been preferred shall not be required.

On an application for cars by a patron of a railroad, under the present law, it is required that he should show that in refusing cars to him that the railroad has discriminated against him individually. This is always difficult to prove. But the provision above, from the Hearst bill, threw the duty of proving the justice of their refusal upon the shoulders of the railroad company. Quite a difference. I offered this amendment, taken from the Hearst bill, at the time the Hepburn bill was being framed in Committee of the Whole, and it was voted down by Democrats and Republicans alike. Great is "conservatism" on railroad rate legislation.

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, February 7, 1907. Mr. Lamar introduced the following bill; which was referred to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce and ordered to be printed.

Mr. Laman introduced the following bill; which was referred to the printed.

A bill to amend an act to regulate commerce.

Be it enacted, etc., That section 15 of the act of Congress entitled "An act to regulate commerce," approved February 4, 1887, as amended June 29, 1906, be, and it is hereby, amended so as to read as follow; "Sec. 15. All orders of the Commission, except orders for the payment of money, shall take effect within such reasonable time, not less than thirty days, and shall continue in force for such period of time, not exceeding two years as shall be suspended or medified or the Commission unless sion or be suspended or set aside by a court of competent jurisdimin. APPENDIX No. 2.

[Senate Document No. 168, Fifty-ninth Congress, first session.] Letter from William D. Marks, consulting engineer and statistician, of Philadelphia, Pa., regarding the overcapitalization of the steam-railway corporations of the United States. DECEMBER 11, 1905.

Hon. WHARTON BARKER, Philadelphia, Pa.

Hon. Wharton Barker.

Philadelphia, Pa.

Dear Sie: Referring to our verbal interviews regarding the overcapitalization of the steam-railway corporations of the United States, and more particularly in reply to your query of the 5th, current, "Let me know what you think a fair capitalization of the railroads or capitalization the public should pay for," I would say that in my experience of late years as a consulting engineer I have been struck by the deplorable and almost universal "watering" of securities in railway corporations practiced by our promoters of these enterprises.

Not only are our railways often wastefully built wholly upon the proceeds of the sale of bonds at figures far below par, but the promoters frequently add to the burden of the earnings of their enterprises by issuing as a bonus (to go with the bonds or appropriated by themselves) an equal or greater amount of stock representing a speculative profit in the future.

So invariably have I found this to be the case that I felt justified, after numerous individual experiences, in saying to you that more than one-half of the railway securities issued represented no real property or investment of cash.

Besides the "water" injected into securities by the original builders of a new railway, other and often larger percentages of it are poured in by financiers who have found their profit in combining a number of individual railways into a "system" by means of a holding and operating corporation.

As a result we frequently find stratum of securities piled upon stratum of securities, until a chart of the securities of a system of some railway systems very closely resembles a geological section.

There can (if my statement is correct) be but one of two results of these manipulations.

Either the public is robbed by overcharging to render these watered securities valuable to their 'owners, or innocent purchasers of them lose all of a portion of their investments if they have been led to believe that their securities represent real property.

Of course we have excepted long bridges (say over 60-foot span) and other unusual features, but throughout Massachusetts and the United States there are very few railways requiring 10,000 cubic yards excavation ($3,500) per mile.

There are notable individual instances of costly and unavoidable engineering expense, but these will be balanced by the average savings from $13,200 allowance per mile for construction.

We see that the average book cost ($38,600) of construction is nearly three times the necessary cost ($13,200) of steam railways to the rail top.

top.

The cost of equipment of the Massachusetts railways is given as $32,957,122. By this is principally meant the rolling stock. For the purpose of this comparison I will place very high figures upon it, though much of it is old and largely depreciated in value:

nue: $22, 770, 000

Baggage and mail cars, 650, at $3,000 each.

Freight cars, 34,825, at $500 each.

Gravel and construction cars, 1,865, at $400 each.

59, 568, 500 Many of these locomotives and cars are leased, but for the purpose of our discussion they should be valued, and so we had better fix their total cost at, say, $76,000,000 instead of $33,000,000, book value given. There are 7,601 miles of single track owned, and with sufficient accuracy for our purposes we can put the first cost of equipment with rolling stock at $10,000 per mile, a very liberal estimate for the Massachusetts railways, which serve a denser population than exists in any other portion of the United States, and which, being a manufacturing community, must use its railways largely.

We have omitted occasional extraordinary expenditures, say, for the tunnels and long bridges over rivers and also for rock cuts and deep excavations.

tunnels and long bridges over rivers and also for rock cuts and deep excavations.

We are perfectly safe, however, in allowing an average of $2,000 per mile of track, or $15,202,000 to cover the cash cost of these extras.

Recapitulating for the average honest cash cost of Massachusetts railways we have for each mile of single track owned:

their most careful examinations and enforced publicity of corporate accounts.

Its dense population requires a larger equipment than the average of the rest of the United States. Its costs of construction are increased, by reason of its rocky soil and hilly topography, far above the average of many other sections.

I have increased the stated book value of equipment from $33,000,000 to $76,000,000; I have added $15,000,000 to well-known standard average costs of construction; I have allowed $11,400,000 for architectural work, and as a result I have obtained an average cash cost per mile of $25,200, which I have no doubt substantially exceeds the true cost of railways.

In education, frugality, industry, and honesty Massachusetts's population stands in the first rank of these United States, and yet we have the following capitalization of the Massachusetts railways:

$133, 435, 355 25, 007, 318 Funded debt. Mortgages, et Mortgages, etc _ Capital stock __ 235, 834, 466

Total capitalization ...

Dividing this by 7.601 miles of single track we obtain about $52,000 capitalization per mile—51½ per cent of water, probably more.

Referring to gross assets of companies given on page 9 of Massachusetts railroad commission's report, June 30, 1903, we find as book accounts, but probably not the practical truth:

Construction Equipment Land and buildings Cash	$293, 236, 332 32, 957, 122 1, 497, 218 40, 880, 067
TotalStocks, bonds, and other property	368, 570, 739 64, 210, 110

Gross assets 432, 780, 849

The item of $64,000,000 probably represents "strategic purchases." having no proper relation to expenditures required to operate the roads for the convenience of the public and the profit of the stockholders.

The Interstate Commerce Commission, June 30, 1903, reports total miles of single track 283,821.51 (this is not the length of roadbed, which is less; it is the total length of all the tracks, wherever placed). Outside of Massachusetts, with a few exceptions, in the Eastern and Middle States the equipment rarely costs as much as $5,000 per mile, and we are liberal in putting the cash cost of construction and equipment of all at an average of $20,000 per mile, or $5,676,420,000. The total railway capital June 30, 1903, was (Interstate Commerce Commission report) $12,599,990,258, or about $7,000,000,000 watered securities and $5,600,000,000 actual value.

Experienced engineers (I mean those who have been through the mill) will tell you the same as I do as to actual costs of constructions and equipment, if not (as in most cases) prevented by personal fear of consequences from disclosing the truth.

You may, and probably will, have many instances of extraordinary cost of construction brought to prove to you the higher cost of our railways. Many of these instances are both unwise and unnecessary expenditures.

Do not forget that for every such case there are hundreds of miles of railway which honestly have not cost $17,500 per mile to construct and equip; on the contrary, very much less.

The fairest index of the proper cost of a railway is not its length of roadbed, but its length of single track.

Twenty thousand dollars per mile is an overestimate of the average cost of most railways crossing the vast prairies of the West.

You will note that I have not brought forward the many individual instances which have come to my notice upon which I based my former statements to you, but have delayed long enough to enable me to verify them, generally by a consideration of all the railways of Massachusetts.

chusetts.

For thirty-four years, beginning on the Delaware, Lackawanna and Western road, as a civil engineer, in the days of the crimes of Fisk and Gould, of the Erie, I have watched the growth of this criminal method called "watering" securities, and to-day we find that their success has led to the perpetration by their imitators of a colossal fraud reaching $7,000,000,000 upon the citizens of this United States.

I wish you godspeed in trying to put a stop to it. If you succeed you will earn the gratitude of every honest man.

I return to you the bill, which could be much improved, and I also hand you Engineering News, November 2, 1905, containing a brief article of mine on "Rallway rates for an electric railway," and the following papers: "What are the facts?" by Slason Thompson; "Facts about railroad rates," by H. T. Newcomb; "Solution transportation problem," by P. S. Grosscup; "Mass. R. R. I. Comm. Rept., June 30, 1903."

After you have read my article in the Engineering News I wish you would refer to Census Bulletins Nos. 3 and 21 just to see how carefully they have avoided giving the required data enabling the fixing of the cost of construction, equipment, and operation of the railways they pretend to deal with.

To the engineer's lot it falls to deal with the concrete and tangible, and when he seeks help from these expensive publications by our Government he finds that because no one compiling the data in them appears to have power to demand replies, or practical experience and grasp, all our Government statisticians have fallen victims to the conspiracy of secrecy among railway promoters and operators, who above all things fear honest publicity for their deeds.

Mr. FOSS. I yield twenty minutes to the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. Higgins].

Mr. HIGGINS. Mr. Chairman, I ask to have read the resolutions which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

RESOLUTION CONCERNING FOREST RESERVES IN THE WHITE MOUNTAINS.

STATE OF CONNECTICUT OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY, GENERAL ASSEMBLY, January, A. D. 1967.

Resolved by this assembly:

Whereas there is now pending before the House of Representatives of the United States a bill providing for the establishment, by purchase, of Federal forest reserves in the White Mountains of New Hampshire and the southern Appalachian Mountains: Be it

Resolved, That it is the sense of the general assembly of Connecticut that the establishment of these reserves is wise public economy, and that it is the opinion of this body that the interests of the State of Connecticut will be furthered by the protection of the forests at the headwaters of the Connecticut River, and that this general assembly urge upon Congress to pass the bill.

Passed house of representatives January 10, 1907.

Senate concurs January 16, 1907.

State of Connecticut, Office of the Secretary, 8s:

I hereby certify that the foregoing is a true copy of record in this

I hereby certify that the foregoing is a true copy of record in this

In testimony whereof I have hereunto set my hand and affixed the seal of said State at Hartford this 31st day of January, A. D. 1907. THEODOR BODENWEIN, Secretary. SEAL.

Mr. HIGGINS. Mr. Chairman, in response to these resolutions and in view of the importance of this legislation I feel that I would be lax in my duty to the people of the State that I in part represent, and who I know are intensely interested in this legislation, did I not call the attention of the House to this measure, now on the Calendar, and known as the "Appalachian and White Mountain Forest Reserve bill." This measure, pro-This measure, proposed by the American Forestry Association and the National Board of Trade was recommended in the President's message and has been repeatedly indorsed by the Department of Agriculture and advocated by the press of the country. In the first session of this Congress this bill passed the Senate, and on May 22, 1906, was unanimously reported to this House by its Committee on Agriculture.

This legislation, Mr. Chairman, in my judgment, is of more pressing and vital interest and importance to the thirteen States whose rivers rise in the Appalachian and White mountains than any that has been considered during this session of Congress, and in consequence is of interest to the entire country. It only carries out well-established principles and does not commit the Government to any new policy.

One is so overwhelmed with the multitude of general and special bills pending that it falls upon those, as it rightfully should, who have for special reasons, responsive to the needs of their constituencies, to be particularly interested in certain legislation to single that out and call it to the attention of the en-tire body and urge its favorable consideration. President Roosevelt, in his message at the convening of this session of Congress, in referring to the Government forest reserves, said:

The forests of the White Mountains and Southern Appalachian regions should also be preserved, and they can not be unless the people of the States in which they lie, through their Representatives in Congress, secure vigorous action by the National Government.

Mr. Chairman, the particular branch of the National Government which at present needs to move is this House. All others have done their full duty.

This bill carries an appropriation of $3,000,000 and gives the Secretary of Agriculture the discretion to purchase such lands as may be readily acquired, and such as will be the best adapted The fact that the bill carries an appropriation to the purpose. ought not of itself to prevent recognition for its consideration by this House or militate against its passage if the proposition is in the interest of a wise economy and is right and just.

Mr. Chairman, when the other legislative branch has passed a measure I assume that no conclusive presumption exists per se that it has not had fair consideration by that body and its committees, especially so when the same proposition is considered and recommended by a great and painstaking committee of this House.

Abundant precedent can be found for this legislation. lions of dollars have already been appropriated, and doubtless wisely spent, in the Reclamation Service. We have just appropriated over $80,000,000 for the improvement of our rivers and harbors; and there are now established and maintained by the Federal Government 138 forest reserves in seventeen different

States and Territories of the Union, covering an area of 127,-154,371 acres

One is too apt to think of the forests either as a matter of sentiment or as something that has no end, and hence no need of pro-Yet, governors of States, legislatures, numerous commercial bodies, many granges, and large numbers of other organizations and individuals have prayed, petitioned, and resolved for the passage of this bill. I believe that the country would have but little sympathy with the argument that the machinery of this House would have to be overworked, as has been said, to secure a vote upon this measure. What the country would be especially concerned about, I take it, is whether the bill is right in principle and would in its result promote the general welfare.

A prima facie case at least, for its consideration has been made out when two Presidents have urged the favorable consideration, the Semate has passed the bill in three different ses sions, and the Committee on Agriculture have unanimously recommended its passage. Is it not at least worthy of some consideration by this body, directly responsible to the people? All that is asked is that this measure be fairly brought before this House for a vote.

Mr. Chairman, speaking for a constituency that is vitally interested in this measure, responsible directly to that constituency for my course, I ask for its consideration, in the belief that the necessity and the wisdom of the enactment of the bill will appeal to the judgment and patriotism of the Members of this body. It ought not to be necessary to plead for the consideration of a measure of this importance, whose effect is so far-reaching. It almost seems needless and perhaps futile to give any extended reasons for the passage of this bill, for the wisdom of establishing these reserves has been so clearly demonstrated by actual test, not only by this country, but for years by other nations who were long ago compelled to recognize the necessity of supervision and control of their forests, as to challenge contradiction. Our supply of gold may diminish and our real wealth not decrease, but not so with our forests and all they do to conserve other natural forces necessary to our commercial life. The Connecticut River, which is 375 miles long and drains a basin of 677,178 acres in area, is absolutely dependent for its regulation upon the preservation of the forests New Hampshire, as provided in this bill.

The committee, in making its report upon this bill, says:

The Connecticut, speaking only of the main river, has a total of 2.038 feet and is capable of being rendered one of the most valuable rivers in the world.

And quoting another authority: "The power developed at Holyoke, Mass., is the largest in the country, except that at Niagara." It is no wonder that this bill now on the Calendar has challenged the attention and won the approval of many not directly affected by its result. It offers the only means of protecting the territory covered by its provisions from the directing the territory covered by its provisions from the directing the territory covered by its provisions from the direction consequences of a deforested land. Already 24 per cent of the southern Appalachian region has lost the power to produce future forests, and in this section the rainfall is heavier than anywhere else on the continent, except on the northern Pacific coast. The New York Evening Post, in an editorial in its issue of December 28, 1906, says:

The rivers flowing into the Pacific have their headwaters protected by vast tracts of forest preserved from indiscriminate lumbering. Those flowing into the Atlantic, though their present commercial use is tenfold greater, rise in regions where the commercial unberman generally has full sway. As the Senate committee reported last year, the New Hampshire rivers "contribute more largely to the prosperity of other States than to hers. She ought not to be expected to burden herself with debt for the benefit of her neighbors; nor can they be expected to purchase land outside their own borders for the creation of a forest reserve."

And, further, the same article in the New York Evening Post adopts the language of the committee report in speaking for the Appalachian Reserve, and says:

The various States in which it is proposed to locate this reserve have already by legislative acts conferred upon the United States Government the right to acquire title to these lands and exempted them from taxation. They can not, because of the proposed location of the reserve in more than one State and their own lack of funds, be expected to go much further.

And the Post closes its editorial by saying:

State cooperation is thus assured, and the project simply waits upon

All that has ever been urged in favor of a forest reserve, either on the floor of this House or elsewhere, can be said in support of this bill, for it affects a locality which is the most thickly settled in the Union and one where the natural resources are most dependent upon the preservation of the forests.

In New Hampshire, where the proposed White Mountain Reserve is located, are the sources of all the principal rivers of New England. In 1900, in the State of New Hampshire, there was cut 177 board feet per acre of wooded area, which was the largest cut per acre recorded in any State in the Union. In the section covered in this bill there are no public lands. In 1878 a law was passed by which the President was authorized to set aside "any part of the public lands wholly or in part covered with timber or undergrowth, whether of commercial value or not, as public reservations, and the President shall by public proclamation declare the establishment of such reservations and the limits thereof."

Under this provision of law the forest reserves have been heretofore set aside. The Department does not intend to reforest this section. The preservation of the present forest lands is, particularly in the case of the White Mountain Reserve, the interests of States which own no land where the forests are located.

This appropriation creates nothing. It preserves, and can not be regarded as an expenditure, but rather an investment which will yield a revenue to the Federal Government. The Secretary of Agriculture estimates that in five years the Department of Forestry will cost the taxpayer nothing. It is estimated that the standing timber now on the Government reserves is worth $700,000,000 and that the entire property is worth $1,400,000,000. Last year the receipts from these reserves amounted to $1,125,000. The Province of Onrevenue of over $3,000,000 annually from its forest lands. The net annual revenue from this source in France amounts to about $59,000,000, and Swiss forests yield a revenue of $8 an acre a year. At present there is but one forest reserve east of the Dakotas and none east of the Mississippi. The danger of a dearth of forests is increasing in a greater proportion than our population. Though steel has displaced wood for many uses, for fencing and shipbuilding, and though cement is displacing wood for building, and coal and gas for heating, still the uses of wood increase.

It is estimated that during the last forty years the consumption of wood has increased at the rate of from 3 to 5 per cent To-day we have no knowledge of the amount of timber consumed annually. It is easy to point to uses made of wood that were unknown only a few years ago. The demands of the country for steam-railroad extension, with the increase of electric lines giving a cheaper form of power, telegraph and tele-phone communication, with the wood-pulp mills, furnish a fitting illustration of the present day draft upon this article of commerce. J. T. Richards, chief engineer of the Pennsylvania Railroad system, says, in speaking on this subject:

Many of the former sources of supply have been already exhausted. Our Pennsylvania roads now look chiefly to inland Virginia, West Virginia, and Kentucky for our white-oak ties, and the long-leaf yellow pine of the Southern States will soon disappear.

The Government Forester says, with reference to the necessity of taking hold of this matter in time, that-

Forest lands are passing out of the Government's ownership every day, lands whose preservation is absolutely essential to the well-being of the country where they lie. It will eventually cost the Government of the United States hundreds of millions of dollars to become possessed again of the areas which it once held, which are now in private ownership, and which are absolutely essential to the welfare of all of us.

Statistics can not be secured of the damage by flood and freshet caused by the indiscriminate cutting and depletion of our forests and the denuding of our forest lands. In the southern Appalachian region alone, from April, 1901, to April, 1902, floods did a damage estimated at $18,000,000. The flow of all our rivers are dependent upon the conserving of the waters at their sources. A river is a nuisance rather than an advantage if its flow is to be spasmodic. We ought at least to be assured that it will furnish something more than freshets. To reach the full measure of usefulness intended by nature and essential to the commercial and material well being of the country, these rivers must be regulated in their flow and not intermittent. The falling of the leaves from the trees form a sponge which insures a well-regulated flow such as nothing else can furnish. The cupidity of man is such that the present generation would strip our forests without regard to those who might come after. It has been said that "it is the traditional policy of consumers of lumber and timber to ignore the possibility of the exhaustion of the timber supply, and invariably they fail to realize the fact until it has already taken place." Forests are peculiar in that they are an agency in place of which nothing can be sub-With the great growth of our country the former wasteful methods of our lumbermen must stop. Our responsi-Wasterful methods of our lamberment mass step. Our responsi-bility does not cease with providing for the present needs.

I am not unmindful of the force of the argument that what this bill seeks to accomplish could in some measure be accomplished by the several States, and I am not one that wants to see all the power of the State surrendered to the Federal Government with a consequent diminution of the State's responsibility in the Government. But we have passed many measures provided for many conditions that the States might have legislated upon.

There is, however, a forestry department in my own State and a forest reserve. Trees are being planted, intelligent supervision exercised, a system of fire protection initiated, advice and cooperation given by the State forester to private individuals interested in preserving their own forest lands, and my State, alive to the necessity of such action, is doing its full duty to the extent of its power and ability. A plan is now being inaugurated in Connecticut to extend its present reserves, so that there will be established a forest reserve in each county in the State. It is to the credit of the foresight of many States that State reserves have been established. And the enactment of this bill does in no measure take away from the State's responsibility. The work of the Federal Government in this particular needs to be augmented by the States. It is not within the power of the thirteen States directly affected by this bill to control the sources of the principal rivers running through them, and the accomplishment of the purposes of this measure can not be secured except by its enactment into law. It is not an experiment. It is not a scheme. It preserves for future generations a necessity, and favorable action should be taken now to insure the full measure of benefit. [Applause.]

Mr. FOSS. I yield thirty minutes to the gentleman from

Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL.]

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I take advantage of the latitude allowed under the rule to discuss the question of the limitations of the authority of executive officers of the Government in the withdrawal of public lands from entry, amounting to a suspension of the land laws, and I shall more particularly address myself to the character and effect of certain orders, dated July 26, October 10, 15, 27, and 31, and November 12, of last year, under which approximately 64,000,000 acres, or an area more than twice the size of the State of New York, and located in the States of Colorado; North Dakota, Montana, Oregon, Washington, Utah, Wyoming, and the Territory of New Mexico, and all of the public lands in the Territory of Alaska were with-drawn from all forms of entry, filing, and selection.

The first order of withdrawal referred to was in the follow-

Interior Department,
Commissioner of the General Land Office,
July 26, 1906.

Sir: In accordance with the wishes and instructions of the President, I have to direct that you immediately suspend and withdraw from entry, filing, or selection under the public land laws all of the public lands in the townships described in the list inclosed herewith until further orders from the Department. Said list of townships are those on which the Director of the Geological Survey has advised the Department "workable coal is known to occur."

I also inclose for your information and for the files of your office copies of certain correspondence in relation to this matter.

Very respectfully,

THOS. RYAN, Acting Secretary.

This order of withdrawal was supplemented by several others withdrawing from all forms of entry under the public-land laws practically all the public lands believed to contain workable deposits of coal, and by departmental order of November 12, 1906, all public lands in Alaska were withdrawn from entry. By departmental order of December 17, 1906, these orders of with-drawal were modified so as to provide for the withdrawal of said lands from coal entry merely." This order is as follows:

"Said lands from coal entry merely." This order is as follows:

Referring to departmental order of July 26, 1906, and all subsequent orders, withdrawing from entry, filing, or selection under the coal and other land laws the public lands in certain designated townships in various States and Territories, in which townships the Director of the Geological Survey alleged "workable coal is known to occur," you are advised that all of said orders are hereby modified so as to provide for the withdrawal of "such lands from coal entry merely."

You will make this special and at once wire this modification to the local officers of the various land districts affected thereby.

You are also advised that departmental order of November 12, 1906, is hereby modified and is to be construed as a withdrawal of the public lands in Alaska "from coal entry merely," and you will at once wire the local officers at Juneau accordingly.

Very respectfully,

E. A. HITCHCOCK, Secretary.

On January 15 these orders were further modified by a letter from the Secretary of the Interior to the Commissioner of the General Land Office, as follows:

Sir: By direction of the President all orders heretofore issued withdrawing public lands from entry under the coal-land laws are hereby amended as follows:

"Nothing in any withdrawal of lands from coal entry heretofore made shall impair any right acquired in good faith under the coal-land laws and existant at the date of said withdrawal."

Very respectfully,

E. A. HITCHCOCK, Secretary The only official statements which have been made as to the reasons for these withdrawals are contained in the annual message of the President communicated by him to Congress at the beginning of this session, as follows beginning of this session, as follows:

It is not wise that the nation should alienate its remaining coal lands. I have temporarily withdrawn from settlement all the lands which the Geological Survey has indicated as containing, or in all probability containing, coal. The question, however, can be properly settled only by legislation, which, in my judgment, should provide for the withdrawal of these lands from sale or entry, save in certain especial circumstances. The ownership would then remain in the United States, which should not, however, attempt to work them, but permit them to be worked by private individuals under a royalty system, the Government keeping such control as to permit it to see that no excessive price was charged consumers. It would, of course, be as necessary to supervise the rates charged by the common carriers to transport the product as the rates charged by those who mine it; and the supervision must extend to the conduct of the common carriers, so that they shall in no way favor one competitor at the expense of another. The withdrawal of these coal lands would constitute a policy analogous to that which has been followed in the withdrawing of forest lands from ordinary settlement. The coal, like the forests, should be treated as the property of the public, and its disposal should be under conditions which would inure to the benefit of the public as a whole.

And in the President's message of December 17, as follows:

And in the President's message of December 17, as follows:

And in the President's message of December 17, as follows:

The present coal law, limiting the individual entry to 160 acres, puts a premium on fraud by making it impossible to develop certain types of coal fields and yet comply with the law. It is a scandal to maintain laws which sound well, but which make fraud the key without which great natural resources must remain closed. The law should give individuals and corporations under proper Government regulation and control (the details of which I shall not at present discuss) the right to work bodies of coal land large enough for profitable development. My own belief is that there should be provision for leasing coal, oil, and gas rights under proper restrictions. If the additional force of special agents and mining experts I recommend is provided and well used, the result will be not only to stop the land frauds, but to prevent delays in patenting valid land claims and to conserve the indispensable fuel resources of the nation.

In what I shall have to say relative to these acts of with

In what I shall have to say relative to these acts of with-drawal I wish to have it clearly understood that I have no disposition to, or thought of, impugning the motives of anyone, much less of appearing in the rôle of a captious critic of, or faultfinder with, acts undertaken in good faith by any executive officer of the Government. In a discussion of the question of authority for these acts the question of good faith or of opinion as to the wisdom or unwisdom of acts of Congress held by executive officers can not properly be considered, and what I have to say I shall say because I feel it my duty to call to the attention of the House and of the country certain executive acts which I believe to be unauthorized by law and not warranted by any authority granted to executive officers either directly and specifically or by any possible construction of any statute and which, if unchallenged, will undoubtedly be considered as establishing a precedent for the exercise of even further and more far-reaching executive power in the same direction, if, indeed that is possible, without a suspension by Executive order of all of the land laws.

It is very clear that the orders of withdrawal above referred to are an entirely new departure from any previous practice by the Executive or the Land Department and are wholly without precedent. They were not made pursuant to any authority of Congress or for the furtherance of any Congressional legislation, nor were they made for any public use. On the contrary, their direct effect and purpose was and has been to suspend the operation of the public-land laws over a vast portion of the public domain. As originally made the orders withdraw these public lands from all "entry, filing, or selection under the public-land laws," and for the space of some five months no entry, filing, or selection of any character whatsoever could be received for any of these lands. It is true that as modified by the recent order, of December 17, 1906, the withdrawal now extends only to entry under the coal-land laws, but the present and continued effect of the orders is to completely suspend the operation of the public-land laws relating to the disposition of coal lands. All lands known or believed to contain workable deposits of coal have been included in these withdrawals, and in the Territory of Alaska, to which the coal-land laws were extended by act of June 6, 1900, no coal entry can be made in any part of the Territory except that the order of January 15 now allows the perfection of entries by final proof and payment where rights were initiated under the coal laws prior to the orders of withdrawal.

To remain silent in the presence of the far-reaching effect of these orders amounts to an acquiescence in their validity, and, as I am unable to find warrant of law for them and further believe that no condition exists surrounding the acquisition of public lands which would warrant or necessitate such orders even were they legal, I feel it my duty to vigorously protest against them.

THE POWER TO RESERVE OR WITHDRAW PUBLIC LANDS.

Examination of the statutes, decisions of the Federal courts, the land decisions and records of the Land Department show that the Executive orders reserving or withdrawing public lands all fall into one of three classes:

pursuant to express legislative authority, or pursuant to a 754); Indian reservations under the acts of March 3, 1863 (12 Stat. L., 819), and April 8, 1864 (13 Stat. L., 39), and under various special acts and treaties between the United States and Indian tribes; sites for reservoirs, ditches, and canals under the act of October 2, 1888 (25 Stat. L., 526); forest reserves under section 24 of the act of March 3, 1891 (26 Stat. L., 1095), and the act of June 4, 1897 (30 Stat. L., 34), and for the reclamation of arid lands under the act of June 17, 1902 (32 Stat. L., 388).

In addition to these general acts there are numerous special

(1) Reservations of public lands for a public purpose made acts of Congress disposing of public lands for public uses, and depending for their execution upon Executive order or proclamation of the President making a specific designation of the tracts reserved, the most important of which are the act of March 1, 1872, creating the Yellowstone National Park; the acts of September 25, 1890 (26 Stat. L., 478), and October 1, 1890 (26 Stat. L., 650), creating the Yosemite National Park, and the act of March 2, 1899 (30 Stat. L., 993) creating the Mount Ranier National Park, in Washington. All these reservations, it will be observed, were made under express authority of Congress.

(2) Withdrawals of public lands by the Executive for the purpose of carrying out Congressional grants of public lands. In this class fall the withdrawal by the Interior Department of lands within the limits of the grants in aid of canals, wagon roads, railways, and other public improvements. In many cases the authority to withdraw lands within the grant limits is expressly conferred by the granting act, and in all cases the authority is necessarily implied in furtherance of the granting act. The granting act carries with it "by necessary implication not only the power, but the duty of the Land Office to reserve from sale the lands embraced in the grant; otherwise its object might be utterly defeated." (Walcott v. Des Moines Co., 681, 688.

(3) Reservations of public lands by the Executive for public purposes, without specific authority of law, but under the general authority vested in him in the administration of the Governal eral authority vested in him in the administration of the Gov-ernment. Such were the reservations made by the President for military purposes prior to the act of June 26, 1834, and Oc-tober 21, 1869, for naval stations, light-houses, etc. The authority of the President to so reserve lands is recognized by the Supreme Court in the case of Grisar v. McDowell

(6 Wall., 363), in which the court said (p. 381):

From an early period in the history of the government, it has been the practice of the President to order from time to time, as the exigencies of the public service require, parcels of land belonging to the United States to be reserved from sale and set apart for public use.

It is upon the authority and principle of this decision that the Land Department upholds its power to reserve public lands without specific authority of Congress. See 1 L. D., 704.

It is expressly stated, however, that the power of the President is to set apart for public uses, and not to suspend from operation of the general land laws, where no public use is to be made of the land. Furthermore, the exercise of this power has always heretofore been restricted to small parcels of land which were required for some definite public use. were required for some definite public use.

Mr. LACEY. Will the gentleman from Wyoming yield for a question?

Mr. MONDELL. Certainly.

Mr. LACEY. I would like to ask my friend this question. It has frequently occurred that the Executive has selected a particular tract of land for a national park or for some other public purpose requiring legislation in order to set it apart for public use. In the communication to Congress requesting such egislation the Executive has given notice of the withdrawal of the land pending the action of Congress on the proposed bill. Has the gentleman considered whether or not the Executive has the power even to go that far?

Mr. MONDELL. I have gone into that quite carefully, and I can find no authority either in the statutes, decisions of the courts, or decisions of the Department for such exercise of executive authority, except as to parcels of land withdrawn for public purposes, such as forts, light-houses, and the like.

Mr. LACEY. That was done in Wind Cave, and I think in the Crater Lake.

That has been done in only one or two cases Mr. MONDELL. that I can recall by reservation of limited tracts of land temporarily, with a view to suggesting legislation for the disposition of such land; but I am of the opinion that there was no authority for such action, and where such action has been taken in the past it has never, in any instance, included more than a few hundred or, at the most, a few thousand acres of land so valueless for general purposes that no one took any notice of it.

The consequences which would follow the unrestricted exer cise of power by the Executive in land withdrawals are well pointed out by Secretary Lamar in the case of Fort Boise Reserration (6 L. D., 16), in which case a reservation was made by the War Department of more than 640 acres, authorized by the act of February 14, 1853. Recognizing the illegality of the Executive action in this respect, the Secretary stated (p. 19):

Will such an act take the lands out of the class of public lands and require their disposal by special enactment? To so hold would indicate that the Executive might in violation of law put in reservation for military purposes any amount of lands, and thus take them out of the operation of the general laws. To assert such a principle is to claim for the Executive the power to repeal or alter the acts of Congress at well.

That it was not the intent of Congress to permit this exercise of the implied Executive power of reservation or withdrawal to be used, except in a limited way, is clearly shown by the laws for the disposal of the public lands in the Oregon country. By the act of September 27, 1850 (9 Stats., 496, 500), the President was given specific authority to designate portions of the lands in Oregon—embracing the present States of Oregon, Washington, and Idaho—"for forts, magazines, arsenals, dockyards, and other needful public uses." Section 9 (10 Stats., 158, 159) specifically restricted, however, the area of land which could be thus designated and reserved. That section provides:

That all reservations heretofore, as well as hereafter made, in pursuance of the fourteenth section of the act to which this is an amendment, shall, for magazines, arsenals, dockyards, and other needful public uses, except for forts, be limited to an amount not exceeding 20 acres for each and every of said objects at any one point or place, and for forts, to an amount not exceeding 640 acres at any one point or

In 1873 the Commissioner of Indian Affairs recommended the establishment of an Indian Reservation at Chehalis, Wash., and the question of the authority of the Executive to reserve lands for such reservation was referred to the Attorney-General by the Secretary of the Interior. Mr. Attorney-General Williams (14 Op., 181) rendered an opinion to the effect that in the absence of either conferred authority by treaty or by statutory provision it is not competent to the Secretary of the Interior to set apart any portion of the public domain for the purpose of an Indian reservation.

No clearer statement has ever been made of the limitations of Executive authority than that given in the decision by the Supreme Court in Kendall v. United States ex rel. Stokes (12 Pet., 524). In that case Congress by act of July 2, 1836 (6 Stat. L., 665), had passed an act directing the Solicitor of the Treasury to settle and adjust the claims of the relator for certain services performed in the transportation of mail. The Solicitor did so adjust and settle the claims in accordance with the act of Congress, but the Postmaster-General, on being notified of the award, refused to carry same into effect. The court held that a writ of mandamus would lie to compel the Postmaster-General to carry into effect the act of Congress and in the course of the opinion said these pertinent words with respect to the relation of the executive and legislative departments (p. 612):

lation of the executive and legislative departments (p. 612):

It was urged at the bar that the Postmaster-General was alone subject to the direction and control of the President with respect to the execution of the duty imposed upon him by this law; and this right of the President is claimed as growing out of the obligation imposed upon him by the Constitution to take care that the laws be faithfully executed. This is a doctrine that can not receive the sanction of this court. It would be vesting in the President a dispensing power which has no countenance for its support in any part of the Constitution and is asserting a principle which, if carried out in its results to all cases falling within it, would be clothing the President with a power entirely to control the legislation of Congress and paralyze the administration of justice.

To contend that the obligation imposed on the President to see the laws faithfully executed implies a power to forbid their execution is a novel construction of the Constitution and entirely inadmissible.

Manifestly these withdrawals do not come within that im-

Manifestly these withdrawals do not come within that implied power of the Executive defined in Grisar v. McDowell, supra, "to order from time to time, as the exigencies of the publie service require, parcels of land belonging to the United States to be reserved from sale and set apart for public uses." gency of the public service exists at the present time any more than during the thirty-four years in which the present coalland laws have been in existence. No public use can possibly be contemplated for this vast area of the public domain. The tracts withdrawn are not "parcels of land," but areas tens of thousands of square miles in extent.

As respects the States of Oregon, Washington, and Idaho it would seem that the provisions of section 9 of the act of February 14, 1853, supra, limiting the area the President is authorized to withdraw for "needful public uses, except for forts," to 20 acres at any one point or place and for forts to 640 acres at any one point or place forbid in terms any such wholesale reservation. This certainly was the opinion of Mr. Attorney-General Williams in the Chehalis Indian Reservation case, supra, in which he says "Those restrictions in terms apply to all reservations which the President is authorized to there make for public uses."

The plain if not the express purpose of these withdrawals is, in effect, to repeal or alter existing land legislation by the Executive. If the Executive is vested with this vast power over the public domain, it is clear, as said by Secretary Lamar in Fort Boise Hay Reservation, supra, that he "might in violation of law put in reservation any amount of lands, and thus take them out of the operation of the general laws. To assert such a principle is to claim for the Executive the power to repeal or alter the acts of Congress."

If an executive officer can do this, if he has the power to "repeal or alter a land statute," he has equally the power to repeal or alter any other statute, for the statutes can not be divided into classes, some of which may be set aside or an-nulled by Executive orders and some of which may not be. The land laws in no wise differ as to their force, validity, and effect from a tariff law. We may have a President some day who may not like some of the schedules of a tariff bill; he might consider them too high; he might be of the opinion that they harbored trusts and combinations; that their effect was to raise prices of necessities and to very greatly oppress and impoverish the people. Would be be justified in suspending or altering such schedules? If he has the right to alter, repeal, or suspend land laws, has he not the same right with regard to tariff laws?

I believe that the laws and decisions which I have cited very clearly indicate the limitations of the authority of the Interior Department to withdraw public lands from entry. Withdrawals of parcels of land can be temporarily made for public purposes; in other words, for such uses as are clearly public in their character for forts, custom-houses, post-offices

Mr. LACEY. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask my friend another question. Suppose the Executive or the Land Department was furnished with information showing a widespread and general line of frauds being perpetrated in a State or land district, or was general in some particular locality? In the gentleman's opinion, would it not be within the power of the Executive to temporarily order all entries suspended in that location until further investigation could be had?

Mr. MONDELL. I was just going to discuss that proposition and I am glad my friend called my attention to it. Though it is true that there is no statute authorizing such action, nor has there been any decision of the courts recognizing such authority, so far as I know, Secretaries of the Interior have, in a very few instances, withdrawn limited tracts of land from entry temporarily where, in their opinion, there was imminent and immediate danger of the alienation of lands in violation of law, unless the entry of such lands was temporarily suspended. This has been done in but very few cases, generally affecting comparatively small areas of land, and in every instance the suspension has been very temporary. Such action has only followed upon report of conditions such as my friend refers to, but I desire to call to his attention the fact that these withdrawals are in no sense and in no way of the character that he refers to. Here is no claim of the existence of widespread frauds; no claim that coal lands were being taken under other laws, for if that was the case then a withdrawal from coal entry would be utterly ineffective.

The withdrawals in question were for the avowed purpose of preventing lands being acquired in accordance with the pro-visions of law, and no matter haw lawful, legal, and regular entries and applications may be they are refused and denied.

We should not lose sight of the very clear distinction be-tween temporary withdrawal of limited areas of lands to prevent their being acquired contrary to law and vast withdrawals for the purpose of preventing citizens from acquiring lands in accordance with laws as in the cases in question. an executive officer may consider a law unwise or its operation harmful can not be argued as an excuse for suspension of the operation of a statute by Executive action. If that doctrine were tenable the operation of laws, the enjoyment by citizens of privileges under them would always depend upon the whim and pleasure of some executive officer. If all land laws can be suspended and rendered inoperative by Executive order over all Alaska and a large portion of the States the homestead law and all the other land laws may be suspended in a like manner over all the public domain.

There is one particularly important respect in which these withdrawals from entry differ from any withdrawal or reservation of lands which I can recall heretofore made in accordance with specific or clearly implied authority of law, and that lies in the fact that under instructions given to the registers and receivers of land offices by the Secretary of the Interior for over five months homesteaders and other entrymen who had been in actual possession of their land for years, had resided upon and improved them, and were approaching the expiration of the period when by the operation of law they must make final proof were barred from doing so, and these entrymen can only be saved from the loss of their land through the suspension by the Interior Department of the law placing a limit within which final proof must be made on entries.

Mr. BONYNGE. Can the gentleman state at this point how many entries were thus suspended?

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I am not informed just how many entries were thus suspended, but I know that they ran into the thousands. Occupying as great a territory as they do, it is impossible without careful search of the land records to find just how many entries were affected.

Mr. BONYNGE. I believe that there were some 300,000, in the neighborhood of that, entries pending the first of the last fiscal year or the first of the present fiscal year.

Mr. MONDELL. There were something less than 300,000 entries in all last year, but of course they were not all suspended, because the land laws were not suspended quite all over the United States.

Mr. BONYNGE. They were only suspended as to the lands that were withdrawn

Mr. MONDELL. Yes. Mr. BONYNGE. And the gentleman has no way of ascertaining how many of these entries were within that territory that was withdrawn.

Mr. MONDELL. It would not be difficult, I think, from a search of the records to find how many there were, but they surely run into the thousands. In the first place, it suspended all coal entries in the United States practically, and there were over 2,000 of them—something like 285 in the Juneau district of Alaska—and in the case of the coal entries, these suspensions prevented the opening of the coal mines at a time when the Northwest was suffering from the greatest shortage of coal ever known in the history of that region, at a time when we are importing coal from Australia for the Pacific coast, and this action fixed a monopoly in the hands of those already engaged in the coal business; this order made it impossible to relieve the coal shortage by opening new mines.

Coal and mineral entrymen, who prior to the promulgation of these orders had entered upon lands, made discoveries and im-provements under the laws and filed statements declaratory of their intent to purchase said lands and pay the Government price therefor were barred from exercising the rights guaranteed by law. This situation has been relieved by the modifying orders referred to, it is true, but in the meantime valuable rights under the homestead and other laws were denied.

While the modifying orders have finally relieved some entrymen and are a tardy recognition of the fact that the original orders were unjust, oppressive, and a denial of rights guaranteed by law, the conditions surrounding their issuance affords the strongest possible proof of the wisdom of Congress in withholding from executive officers authority to make sweeping withdrawals of land, for it developed in the effort to secure a restoration of the land to entry, or at least a modification of the orders, that the executive officials who were responsible for the orders did not understand their purport or effect, and insisted when approached on the subject that the original orders related to coal entries only; so it transpires that all of the land laws were repealed and all rights of entrymen suspended in all of Alaska, and over 64,000,000 acres of public land in the States I have mentioned without the officers who issued the orders fully comprehending the fact.

And so, Mr. Chairman, we have the edifying spectacle presented to us of all the land laws being suspended and the rights of all homestead and other entrymen set aside over an area of 700.000 square miles without those responsible for such action understanding the effect of their own orders, and I submit this is a condition of affairs too serious in its present effect or its future influence to be overlooked or ignored. It is true that when the full effect of this injustice and wrong was realized the Interior Department graciously issued to its "subjects" in the "provinces" of the West an imperial rescript restoring a part of the rights under law which had been taken from them, and thus we have passed, so far as land laws are concerned, from a government under law and by statute to a government under which laws are annulled, suspended, or modified at the whim and pleasure of executive officials, and yet this is supposed to be a republican form of government with three distinct branches--executive, legislative, and judicial.

THE COAL LAND SITUATION.

Having given some attention to the question of the authority of the Executive Departments of the Government to suspend the land laws and withdraw lands from entry, I propose very briefly to state some facts pertaining to the situation and conditions surrounding public coal lands and in proof of my assertion that if authority existed for the suspension and with-drawals in question, no condition existed necessitating or warranting such action. No one knows, even approximately, the area of land on the public domain containing workable veins of coal or coal deposits which at some time in the future may pay for working. Over 64,000,000 acres, or, as I have before stated, an area more than twice as large as the State of New York, not including the withdrawals in Alaska, have been withdrawn from entry as coal land. It is well known that very considerable areas of these lands contain no coal whatever; that other large areas contain coal of such inferior quality or in such limited quantities that it is never likely to be worked. It is also true that there are possibly considerable coal areas not included in the withdrawals, and it is probably a fair estimate to place the public land areas containing coal in sufficient quantity and of a quality to some time pay for working at 65,000,000 acres, in addition to which we have known coal areas in Alaska estimated by the Geological Survey at 8,305 square miles, or 5,315,200 acres, with the probability that the total area will be found to be much greater.

For a great many years the public lands were sold at a nominal price or granted for military and other services without regard to the coal they contained. While a law was passed as early as 1864 providing for the sale of coal lands, no lands were thus sold until the passage of the act of June 3, 1873, providing for the sale of coal lands in tracts of 160 acres, at from $10 to $20 an acre, depending upon the distance from railroad, and the lands of the thirteen original States, as well as the public lands containing coal disposed of prior to 1873, including the vast and valuable deposits of Pennsylvania, Virginia, Tennessee, Kentucky, Alabama, Ohio, Illinois, Indiana, Iowa, Missouri, and Kansas, aggregating over 125,000,000 acres, passed into private ownership as free grants or at the outside for $2.50 an

From these figures it will be seen that we have disposed of, under the coal-land law, in thirty-four years a trifle over 400,000 acres of coal land, or at the rate of less than 12,000 acres per annum. In the last five years the sales have been somewhat larger than any previous like period and have amounted to about 30,000 acres per annum. Last year the sales amounted to slightly in excess of 44,000 acres. Assuming that the remaining coal lands on the public domain, exclusive of Alaska, cover territory as great as that now reserved from coal entry and that the disposals are to continue at the rate of last year, it would require fifteen hundred and forty-five years to dispose of the public coal lands outside of Alaska.

While it is undoubtedly true that the demand for coal lands will very greatly increase in future, these figures are striking enough to furnish convincing proof of the fact that whatever it may be thought best to do with the remaining coal lands of the country, they are not now being absorbed with a rapidity that need cause any alarm or that would warrant their being with drawn from entry.

Neither has there existed a condition relative to the enforcement and operation of the coal-land law that would warrant its suspension, even were there authority to do so by Executive order, for under our laws coal lands command the highest price of any class of Government land, while mineral lands, which may contain millions of values per acre, are sold at from $2.50 to $5 per acre, and other classes of lands are granted free under certain conditions or are sold at a nominal price. The coal entryman pays $20 per acre for his land if within 15 miles of a railroad and $10 per acre if at a greater distance. That the price is high is evidenced by the limited area sold.

It is alleged that in some instances entrymen under the coal laws have not taken up coal lands for their own exclusive use and benefit, but with a view of consolidating entries in a corporation or copartnership, in order to make large operations possible. It is probably true this has been done, for there are few places in the West where a coal mine can be successfully operated if confined to 160 acres of land, but certainly there is no violation of even the strained construction the Interior Department places on the law where the entryman retains an interest in the operations, as is often the case.

As a matter of fact, there is nothing in the coal-land law to indicate that it was the intent of Congress that the entryman should purchase the land for his own exclusive use and benefit. Certainly Congress had no idea that every man purchasing a tract of coal land would have money enough to open a mine. In fact, up to the time of the suspension and withdrawals to which I have referred, no entryman who made a purchase of coal land by what is known as private entry, under section 2347, was ever required at any stage of the proceedings to swear or state that he made the purchase for his own exclusive use and benefit, as is indicated by the form for such entries prescribed in the regulations of the General Land Office issued in a pamphlet entitled "Coal Land Law and Regulations Thereunder," first issued in 1882 and reissued at various times thereafter and as late as 1905.

The coal-land law provides for a sale outright of coal land, and if the Interior Department would so construe and administer it there would be slight reason for the criticism of it made by the President that "it puts a premium on fraud by making it impossible to develop certain types of coal fields and yet comply with the law."

In this, as in the case of a number of our land laws, the Department has placed a strained construction on the law and then proceeded to denounce and to attempt to prevent and punish as a fraud acts which violate neither law nor sound public policy.

Some agents and officials of the Department have gone so far in their attempt to attract attention to themselves and to pose as particularly vigilant guardians of the public domain as to report and loudly proclaim as fraudulent and tremendously threatening to the integrity of the public domain acts recognized and authorized by the laws, as, for instance, the location and entry of coal land through an agent.

The feature of the recent withdrawals that caused the greatest immediate hardship and resulted in the greatest injustice is contained in the instructions to registers and receivers not to receive the purchase money tendered by those who since the withdrawals have sought to purchase and pay for the lands in their possession under lawful claims established by them prior to the said withdrawals. This policy, which happily is no longer pursued, prevented the opening of new mines and the increase of the coal output at a time when the demand for coal was greater than it ever has been in the public-land States, when in many localities people were actually suffering for want of fuel.

The effect of this policy was to put a stop to new development in the entire intermountain and coast region and establish a monopoly in the mines already in operation. At the time the orders of withdrawal went into effect there were over 2,000 declaratory statements on file, 285 of them in the Juneau district of Alaska. Numbers of these intending purchasers offered their money to the land officers, who, under instructions, refused to receive it. Discouraged by this refusal, fearful that they would not be able to secure title to their lands, many ceased driving their entries, erecting buildings, putting in machinery, and a condition of stagnation, so far as new development was concerned, was established. Over a vast area where the cry for additional fuel is unceasing and where with the rapid increase of population and of industries the Government ought to be urging, aiding, and assisting the opening of new coal mines, all new development was strangled by the Secretary's orders. In the midst of limitess fields of coal and an ever-increasing demand for fuel, we were confronted with a Government notice to keep hands off.

PROPOSED NEW COAL-LAND POLICY.

I shall not attempt at this time to discuss at length the propriety or wisdom of the very radical change in our land policy involved in a proposed departure from our system of sale of lands in fee simple, and the adoption of a system under which coal, oil, and gas shall hereafter be retained in Government ownership, to be exploited and produced on a royalty basis, but I desire to emphasize the fact that there is nothing in the present situation warranting a suspension of the coal-land law, even were it authorized by law, during consideration of the policy of public ownership of all fuel in the public domain. Whatever one may think of the proposition of Government ownership of railways, there are few, I believe, who would applied the wisdom of any action which would render impossible the building or betterment of railroads in certain sections of the country pending a discussion by Congress of a plan for acquiring all the railways of the nation, though the fact that all development was arrested might incline some timid souls to agree to any plan of paternalism if that seemed the only avenue of relief from the situation thus created.

I desire to suggest the thought that the very radical departure in policy involved in government ownership and operation of coal, oil, and gas mines and wells is rather too large a one to be undertaken offhand without serious consideration. It is the most tremendous step thus far suggested in the direction of that state socialism, paternalism, and centralization which just now seems to be so popular in certain quarters.

If this new and startling policy is to be undertaken with a view of correcting or preventing the evils of high prices of fuel, present or prospective, we ought at least to consider whether the proposed remedy is not worse than the disease, and not lose sight of the fact that in practically every part of the United States to-day, at least outside of the anthracite regions, there is the liveliest competition among coal operators, and the average price of coal at the pit mouth is, according to Government reports, but little over $1 a ton; that the factors which enter into local high prices to consumers are transportation and the profits of middlemen and of the retailer, none of which could be affected to any appreciable extent, if at all, by a system of Government leasing, but all of which can be relieved, if they are the result of combinations, by existing law. The admitted evils of the ownership and control of coal mines by railroads have already been directly treated by Congress in the railway-rate bill. It should be further remembered that no action which we could take relative to the remaining public coal lands of the United States could ever beneficially affect the coal market of the country east of the Missouri River, for transportation charges place the limit beyond which coal mined from the remaining public lands could not go, even though it were placed on board cars without any cost whatever; so that the proposed system, while it threatens the development of the West, could not change the coal situation east of the Missouri River.

If this proposed paternalistic government policy, of which up to this time the Russian Empire has had an unenvied monopoly, is undertaken with a view of securing vast sums to the Federal Treasury in the exploiting of western coal and oil lands, as is indicated by the measures which have been introduced on the subject, the people of the West may well protest against a reversal of our governmental policy, under which private enterprise was encouraged, under which the Government secured its revenues from the people who developed its resources; and the adoption of a policy under which the West, already suffering under countless handicaps and struggling against great odds to develop its resources, is to be made to pay a tribute of heavy royalties for the benefit of the balance of the

A CENTRALIZING AND PATERNALISTIC POLICY.

The lengths of paternalism and centralization to which the proposed policy would carry us is strikingly illustrated in the provisions of Senate bill 8013, a bill reserving from entry and sale all rights to coal and other materials used for fuel. It proposes a new form of patent for all public lands, under which the entryman and purchaser under all laws is prohibited the use and enjoyment of any fuels found in the land, while the right of way and easement over all portions of his land for the purposes of mining and developing and producing coal, oil, and gas is retained for the Government and its lessees. It provides for constant, continuous supervision and inspection by the Government of every process and procedure in mining, control by the Federal Government of the terms of employment, the character of the employees, and generally of those matters within the exclusive jurisdiction of the States

As a fitting corollary of this centralization, State socialism and paternalism, the prospector with his pick and shovel, his grub stake, and his pack mule, is to be banished from the public lands of the United States. Section 11 of the bill provides that none, except some favored person armed with a Federal license, shall henceforth go forth into the mountains, over the arid plains, across the deserts, seeking out, exploring, finding and bringing to the attention of the world the mineral resources of the country. Any venturesome American citizen, hopeful, industrious, hardy, and optimistic, who shall dare to attempt, on his own motion, to commit the unpardonable crime of crossing the trackless desert, climbing mountains, suffering heat, cold, hunger, and fatigue for the purpose of bringing to light and to development the mineral fuel resources of the Union is hereafter to be branded a criminal and a malefactor under our new system, in which we are to have not a government of, for, and by the people, but a people of, for, and by grace of the Government.

I commend a perusal of the bill in question to those who desire to have a faint glimmering and outline placed before them of the road we shall travel when we embark upon these schemes and policies of centralization and paternalism. It is true that under the royalties prescribed in that bill and under the limitations of such a lease as could be obtained under it, none could afford to embark in an operation for the development of the fuels of the West. Development would be arrested, suspended, but in the philosophy of the true paternalist, why care for that? The time would come when the necessities of the dwellers in that region, with the slight increase of population that will come in spite of all handicaps, would compel acceptance of such system, and then what a glorious thing it would be to have the Government in absolute control of all the mines, encouraging or retarding output to suit the purposes of an administra-tion, deciding who should and who should not be employed and how, and wringing from the necessities of the people of that region vast sums for the benefit of other parts of the Union.

It would seem that even a most superficial examination of the situation in the States containing public coal lands would be sufficient to convince anyone that what is needed there is encouragement rather than discouragement of coal mining and gas and oil development. The oil output of the States still containing any considerable quantity of public land is but a fraction of 1 per cent of the production of the country, while all of the States to be affected by the proposed legislation together produce less than 5 per cent of the coal mined in the United States, the output last year being as follows:

It is high time that we know whether the land laws of the country may be arbitrarily set aside by an executive officer of the Government. It is time that we knew what legislation is necessary to be written into a land law to prevent its repeal by Executive action and that we know what are the limitations on the authority of executive officers touching these matters.

The entire West is getting very restive under the policies and pronouncements of the present administration of the Interior Department. Our people are becoming alarmed at the growing menace of the usurpation of power by executive officers; over the growth of that system that now seems to be so strongly urged by certain Government officials, under which our public-land system is to be overturned, sales and dispositions of the public lands discouraged, and a system of permanent Federal landlordism established with an army of Federal spies, informers, inspectors, and tax gatherers to administer it. The withdrawal of all of our coal lands from entry and a demand for a leasing system is one of the manifestations of this policy. The effort being made with almost contemptuous disregard of the views of the people of the territory affected for The effort being made with almost contemptuous the establishment of a system of Government range under which settlement will be discouraged and retarded, the interests of a few large stockmen promoted at the expense of the small stockman, farmer, and homesteader is another.

We of the West are still believers in the Anglo-Saxon doctrine of private ownership of real estate. We believe that trine of private ownership of real estate. We believe that Government landlordism is but little more tolerable than private landlordism and, far removed from the influence of local public sentiment as its administration would be, might become much more intolerable.

The Congress is fully competent to pass upon the questions involved in the disposition and care of public lands; the Congress should be allowed to dispose of these questions free from undue influence on the part of the Executive Departments and free from Executive interference with the orderly operation of Officers of the Interior Department have complained that there have been some violations of the land laws. All such violations that may have occurred pale into insignificance compared with the violation of law by the Department itself in the issuance of the orders to which I have referred. [Applause.]

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose, and Mr. Dalzell, acting as Speaker pro tempore, having resumed the Chair, Mr. Sherman, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 24925) making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1908, and for other purposes, and had come to no resolution thereon.

DAM ACROSS SNAKE RIVER, STATE OF WASHINGTON.

The SPEAKER pro tempore laid before the House the following resolution from the Senate; which was read, considered, and agreed to:

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES February 7, 1907.

Resolved, That the Secretary be directed to request the House of Representatives to return to the Senate the bill (H. R. 24928) "Authorizing the construction of a dam across the Snake River, in the State of Washington, by the Benton Water Company."

SENATE BILLS REFERRED.

Under clause 2, Rule XXIV, Senate bills of the following titles were taken from the Speaker's table and referred to their appropriate committees as indicated below:

S. 6691. An act granting to the Columbia Valley Railroad Company a right of way through Fort Columbia Military Reservation, at Scarborough Head, in the State of Washington, and through the United States quarantine station in section 17. township 9 north, range 9 west, of Willamette meridian, in said State of Washington, and for other purposes—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

S. 7502. An act providing for the appointment of an appraiser of merchandise for the customs collection district of Puget Sound, State of Washington-to the Committee on Ways and Means.

S. 8128. An act granting to the St. Johns Light and Power Company a right of way for street railroad purposes through the United States military reservation of Fort Marion, in St. Augustine, Fla., and through other Government property in said

S. 8186. An act to construct and place a light-ship at or near Ohio Shoal, Narragansett Bay, R. I .- to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

S. 8277. An act providing for stated leaves of absence to entrymen under the homestead laws.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. WACHTER, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

H. R. 3393. An act granting an honorable discharge to Galen E. Green.

H. R. 24541. An act making appropriations to supply additional urgent deficiencies in the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1907, and for other purposes.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

By unanimous consent, leave was granted to-

Mr. SOUTHWICK to withdraw from the files of the House, without leaving copies, the papers in the case of John V. Behan, H. R. 5652, Fifty-sixth Congress, no adverse report having been made thereon.

Mr. Hogo to withdraw from the files of the House, without leaving copies, the papers in the case of George W. Haney, H. R. 9764, Fifty-eighth Congress, no adverse report having been made thereon.

Mr. Huff to withdraw from the files of the House, without leaving copies, the papers in the case of Rev. J. H. Pershing, H. R. 8621, Fifty-ninth Congress, no adverse report having been made thereon.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 4 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, the following executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a report of rents received from property in Washington purchased as a site for a Hall of Records—to the Committee on Ways and Means, and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the Secretary of State, recommending legislation to permit certain officials of the United States Government to accept decorations from the Emperor of Japan—to the Committee on Foreign Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, bills and resolution of the following titles were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the several Calendars therein panel as follows:

Mr. BURNETT, from the Committee on the Public Lands, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 22346) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to sell the timber off of the lands in Mays Gulf of Little River in Alabama, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 7572); which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. ANDREWS, from the Committee on the Territories, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 12857) to validate certain acts of the legislative assembly of the Territory of New Mexico with reference to the issuance of certain bonds, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 7574); which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 12858) permitting the county of Taos, in the Territory of New Mexico, to refund its indebtedness at a lower rate of interest, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 7575); which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. MARTIN, from the Committee on the Public Lands, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 24655) to authorize the legislature of Oklahoma to dispose of a certain section of school land, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 7578); which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. HARDWICK, from the Committee on Election of President, Vice-President, and Representatives in Congress, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 7120) to further provide for the Presidential succession, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 7581); which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

House on the state of the Union.

Mr. LACEY, from the Committee on the Public Lands, to which was referred the bill of the House H. R. 24877, reported in lieu thereof a bill (H. R. 25550) confirming entries and applications under section 2306 of the Revised Statutes of the United States for lands embraced in what was formerly the Columbia Indian Reservation, in the State of Washington, accompanied by a report (No. 7584); which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. WANGER, from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, to which was referred the bill of the Senate (S. 5384) to amend rule 12 of section 4233 of the Revised Statutes of the United States relating to lights on water craft, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 7567); which said bill and report were referred to the House Calendar.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill of the Senate (S. 5385) to amend an act entitled "An act to adopt regulations for preventing collisions upon certain harbors, rivers, and inland waters of the United States," approved June 7, 1897, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 7568); which said bill and report were referred to the House Calendar.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill of the Senate (S. 5386) to amend an act entitled "An act to regulate navigation on the Great Lakes and their connecting and tributary waters," approved February 8, 1895, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 7569); which said bill and report were referred to the House Calendar.

Mr. LACEY, from the Committee on the Public Lands, to which was referred the resolution of the House (H. Res. 415) directing the Secretary of the Interior to inform the House of Representatives relative to lands in New Mexico, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 7573); which said resolution and report were referred to the House Calendar.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 21934) to provide for reports and registration of all cases of tuberculosis in the District of Columbia, for free examination of sputum in suspected cases, and for preventing the spread of tuberculosis in said District, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 7577); which said bill and report were referred to the House Calendar.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT presented petitions of the Woman's Christian Temperance unions of Crothersville, Lindow, Duff, and Fairmount, all in the State of Indiana, praying for an investigation of the charges made and filed against Hon. REED SMOOT, a Senator from the State of Utah; which were ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. HALE. I present in the form of a memorial a protest of eleven bishops of the United States, which instead of reading myself I ask that the Secretary may read, with the names of

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, the Secretary will read the memorial as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, the Secretary will read the memorial as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

The fact that the triennial meeting of the general convention of the Protestant Episcopal Church at Jamestown, Va., and the celebration of the tercentennial of its establishment in America coincides with the coming national exposition there furnishes an occasion and perhaps creates a duty for the expression of a criticism upon the proposed programme of the exposition by the bishops of the church, ministers of the gospel of peace.

In common with many others throughout the country we have been surprised and shocked at the transformation of the programme, which has now gone so far as only too fully to warrant the announcement which is made that the exposition will be primarily a military and naval celebration. That an international military and naval celebration was to have conspicuous place in the exposition's programme, as provided for by Congress in 1995, was well known and may have been conventionally proper; but the purpose to make the exposition "the greatest military spectacle the world has ever seen" was not avowed and has clearly been a gradually evolving purpose, whose carrying out, as now so elaborately detailed in the exposition's official organ and advertised throughout the country, can only work immense mischief to the country and to the world.

The present programme is utterly different in its order and proportions from that given when the plan of the exposition was first submitted to the public, when the various States were asked for and granted large financial support to insure its success. We are unwilling to believe that many of our States would, with knowledge of the predominant features of the present programme, in which an amount double the Government's total original grant of the exposition is to be devoted to military pageant alone, have made such appropriations. We are confident that such a plan as that now announced, calculated to stir up the fever of military peacer

Mr. HALE. For the present let the memorial lie on the table.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. BERRY, from the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (8, 8274) to amend an act to authorize the construction of two bridges across the Cumberland River at or near Nashville, Tenn., reported it with amendments, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. DILLINGHAM, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred the bill (S. 7302) to incorporate the American Medical Union, reported adversely thereon, and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

Mr. CLAPP, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 8365) authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to cancel certain Indian allotments and substitute therefor smaller allotments of irrigable land, and providing for compensatory payments to the irrigation fund on lands so allotted within the Truckee-Carson irrigation project, reported it favorably with an amendment.

ADDITIONAL AIDS TO NAVIGATION.

Mr. FRYE. I am directed by the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 25242) to authorize additional aids to navigation in the Light-House Establishment, and for other purposes, to report it favorably with amendments, and I submit a report thereon.

It is a bill of considerable importance, and it will necessarily go to conference. Therefore I am obliged to ask present consideration for the bill.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. FRYE. I suggest that there is no need of reading the bill for the information of the Senate. It simply provides for lighthouses, monuments, buoys, and other aids to navigation. So I ask that the formal reading be dispensed with and that it may be read for amendment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered. The first amendment of the Committee on Commerce was, on page 2, after line 6, to insert:

A light and fog signal in New York Bay at the entrance to the dredged channel at Greenville, city of Bayonne, Hudson County, N. J., at a cost not to exceed $75,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 2, to insert after line 12:

A light-ship, with fog signal, to be placed at or near Ohio Shoal, Narragansett Bay, Rhode Island, at a cost not to exceed $50,000.

Post lights on Fox River, Lake Winnebago and connecting lakes and channels, at a cost not to exceed $500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 4, after line 15, to insert:

A light-house and fog-signal station of the second order, together with a keeper's house and all necessary equipment, under plans prepared by the Light-House Board, at the easterly end of Gull Island, Apostle Group, westerly end of Lake Superior, Wisconsin, at a cost not to exceed $75,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 4, after line 16, to insert: A steam tender for the use of the light-house inspector of the twelfth light-house district, at a cost not to exceed $150,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Th next amendment was, on page 4, to insert after line 18:

An additional strip of land to the eastward of the light-house at Pigeon Point, California, and added to the light-house reservation, at a cost not to exceed $5,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 4, after line 24, to insert: A light and fog signal station on Red Rock, upper part of San Francisco Bay, California, at a cost not to exceed $30,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, to insert after the preceding amendment:

A steam tender for the light-house service in Hawaiian and Pacific islands waters, at a cost not to exceed $150,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 5, after line 1, to insert:

A light-house and fog-signal station on Cape Spencer, at the entrance Cross Sound, in the district of Alaska, at a cost not to exceed

The next amendment was, on page 5, line 2, before the word "Bank," to strike out "Swift Shore" and insert "Swiftsure;" so as to make the clause read:

A light vessel at or near Swiftsure Bank, off the entrance of Juan de Fuca Strait, Washington, at a cost not to exceed $130,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 5, after line 4, to insert:

Rebuilding and equipment of a light-house and fog signal at Cape rago, Oregon, at a cost not to exceed $20,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, to insert after the preceding amendment:

A light-house and fog-signal station on Eliza Island, Bellingham Bay, Washington, at a cost not to exceed $30,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, to insert after the preceding amendment:

A steel steam self-propelling light-vessel off Orford Reef, to be located about 1 mile north of Fox Rock and 5 miles north of Cape Blanco, Oregon, at a cost not to exceed $120,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

PORTLAND AND SEATTLE RAILWAY COMPANY.

Mr. PILES. I ask unanimous consent for the consideration of the bill (S. 8288) authorizing and empowering the Secretary of War to locate a right of way for and granting the same and a right to operate and maintain a line of railroad through the Fort Wright Military Reservation, in the State of Washington, to the Portland and Seattle Railway Company, its successors and assigns,

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Has the morning business been concluded?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It has not been concluded.

Mr. CULLOM. Will the Senator withhold his request until after the morning business has been concluded?

Mr. PILES. Very well.

DIPLOMATIC AND CONSULAR APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HALE submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 24538) making appropriations for the diplomatic and consular service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1908, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 1, 2, and 3.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 4, and agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 5, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows:

In lieu of the matter stricken out and inserted by said amendment, insert the following:

For the thirteen consular clerks heretofore provided for by law, $21,056.

From and after the 1st day of July, 1907, the salaries of consular clerks shall be at the rate of $1,000 a year for the first three years of continuous service as such, and shall be increased $200 a year for each succeeding year of continuous service until a maximum compensation of $1,800 a year shall be reached, and section 1704, Revised Statutes, and its amendatory act of June 11, 1874, are hereby so amended: Provided, That the salary of no consular clerk herein provided for and now in the service shall be reduced by this act; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 6, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows:

CONSIDERATION OF THE RIVER AND HARBOR BILL.

Mr. FRYE. The Committee on Commerce will commence the consideration of the river and harbor bill Monday morning at half past 10 o'clock, meeting every morning at that hour until the bill is finally concluded. Monday, Tuesday, and Wednesday mornings the committee will hear Senators on the various amendments which they have proposed. There will be no hearings outside of those given to Senators.

S. W. PEEL.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. I ask for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 19930) referring the claim of S. W. Peel for legal services rendered the Choctaw Nation of Indians to the Court of Claims for adjudication.

In connection with the request, I wish to state that this same bill was called up some days since and the consideration of it was objected to by the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH 1.

Mr. WARREN. It is a bill now on the Calendar? The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill is on the Calendar.

Mr. WARREN. I think we ought to proceed with the morning business

Mr. LODGE. Let us have the regular order.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. I ask permission to say to the Senator from Wyoming that the bill was reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs and its consideration asked a day or two since. The Senator from Rhode Island objected, not then being sufficiently advised to permit the matter to proceed to final passage. The Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER] likewise interposed an objection. Since that time they have looked into that matter, and they now authorize me to say that they have no further objection to the consideration of the bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The regular order is demanded by the Senator from Massachusetts.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. KITTREDGE. I ask unanimous consent for the consideration of the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 224) directing the Secretary of Commerce and Labor to investigate and report to Congress concerning existing patents granted to officers and employees of the Government in certain cases.

The Secretary read the joint resolution; and there being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

Mr. DANIEL. I desire to suggest an amendment to the joint resolution. I move to add at the end:

He shall also report what royalties, if any, have been paid to officers or employees of the Government on the use of articles or processes patented.

Mr. KITTREDGE. Let the amendment be read.

The Secretary read the amendment; and it was agreed to. The joint resolution was reported to the Senate as amended. and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed, and the joint resolution to be read a third time.

The joint resolution was read the third time, and passed.

S. W. PEEL.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. Mr. President, I now ask for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 19930) referring the claim of S. W. Peel for legal services rendered the Choctaw Nation of Indians to the Court of Claims for adjudication. It is the same bill for which I asked consideration a while ago, and the consideration of which was objected to several days since, the objection being made generally by the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. Aldrich], now in his seat. The bill was also objected to by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. Spooner], who is also now present. Both Senators having withdrawn their objections to the bill, I now renew the request for unanimous consent for its present consideration.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It proposes to refer to the Court of Claims the claim of S. W. Peel, of Bentonville, Ark., for legal services rendered and expenditures had for the Choctaw Nation of Indians, of the Indian Territory, in an action in the Court of Claims wherein Yvon Pike and Lillian Pike, and Yvon Pike as the administrator of the estate of Luther S. Pike, deceased, were plaintiffs, and the Choctaw Nation was defendant, etc.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MONUMENT ON TIPPECANOE BATTLE GROUND.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Mr. President

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Wyoming yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. WARREN. I do. Mr. BEVERIDGE. I I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 8012) to erect a monument on the Tippecanoe battle ground in Tippecanoe County, Ind.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It proposes to appropriate $12,500 to be expended with the sum hereinafter named, under the direction of the Secretary of War, in procuring and erecting a monument upon Tippecanoe battle ground in Tippecanoe County, Ind., in honor of Gen. William Henry Harrison and the soldiers who composed the American army in the battle of Tippecanoe on the 7th day of November, 1811, upon the condition that the State of Indiana shall provide a like sum, to be expended for the purpose under the direction of the Secretary of War, in connection with the sum herein appropriated; and no part of the sum herein appropriated shall be available until the sum to be provided by the State of Indiana shall have been placed at the disposal of the Secretary of War.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ACTING ASST. SURG. JULIAN TAYLOR MILLER.

Mr. DANIEL. I ask unanimous consent for the present con-Mr. DANIEL. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 18007) to authorize the appointment of Acting Asst. Surg, Julian Taylor Miller, United States Navy, as an assistant surgeon in the United States Navy.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Wyoming yield to the Senator from Virginia;

Mr. WARREN. I will yield for the consideration of that bill if it will provoke no discussion. Mr. DANIEL. I think it will not. Its passage is recommended by the Navy Department.

Mr. WARREN. Very well; unless some question arises on the bill, I shall not object to its consideration.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PORTLAND AND SEATTLE RAILWAY COMPANY.

Mr. PILES. Mr. President

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Wyoming yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. WARREN. I do.

Mr. PILES. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 8288) authorizing and empowering the Secretary of War to locate a right of way for and granting the same and a right to operate and maintain a line of railroad through the Fort Wright Military Reservation, in the State of Washington, to the Portland and Seattle Railway Company, its successors and assigns.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. PILES. I offer the amendment to the bill which I send to the desk

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Washington will be stated.

The Secretary. In section 1, page 1, after the word "hundred," at the end of line 4, it is proposed to strike out "and fifty;" and in the same line, after the word "width," to insert "except that for bridges and other structures and approaches thereto he may, in his discretion, locate a right of way not exceeding 150 feet in width;" so as to make the section read:

ceeding 150 feet in width; "so as to make the section read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War is hereby authorized and empowered to locate a right of way, not exceeding 100 feet in width, except that for bridges and other structures and approaches thereto he may in his discretion locate a right of way not exceeding 150 feet in width, through the lands of the Fort Wright Military Reservation, in the State of Washington, if in his judgment it can be done in such a manner as not to interfere with the uses of said reservation for military purposes by the United States; and when said right of way shall be so located it is hereby granted during the pleasure of Congress to the Portland and Seattle Railway Company, a corporation organized under the laws of the State of Washington, its successors and assigns, for the purpose of constructing a railroad and telegraph line thereon: Provided, That the said right of way and the width and location thereof through said lands, the compensation thereof, and the regulations for operating said railroad within the limits of the said military reservation so as to prevent all damage to public property or for public uses shall be prescribed by the Secretary of War prior to any entry upon said lands or the commencement of the construction of said works: Provided also, That whenever said right of way shall cease to be used for the purposes aforesaid the same shall revert to the United States.

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

B. JACKMAN.

Mr. BURNHAM. I ask the Senator from Wyoming to yield to me that I may request the consideration of a bill which will not lead to debate.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I want to accommodate all Senators, but after the consideration of the bill of the Senator from New Hampshire and a very short matter which the Senator from Texas [Mr. Culberson] desires to present I shall have to insist upon the regular order.

Mr. BURNHAM. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 2708) for the relief of B. Jackman.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It directs the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to B. Jackman, agent of the Maine Central Railroad Company, Vanceboro, Me., $1,678.88 for refund of duties paid on 1,499 cases of condensed milk erroneously entered for consumption and shipped in transit through the United States to Dawson, Yukon Territory.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, or dered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

F. KRAUT.

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President-

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Wyoming yield to the Senator from Texas?

Mr. WARREN. I shall yield to the Senator from Texas, but after that I shall have to ask for the regular order.

Mr. CULBERSON. I ask unanimous consent for the consideration at this time of the bill (H. R. 20168) for the relief of F. Kraut, of Leon Springs, Tex.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It directs the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to F. Kraut, of Leon Springs, Tex., $325 in full settlement of claims for damage to property incident to the target practice of the Army of the United States near Leon Springs, Tex.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ARMY APPROPRIATION BILL

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 23551) making appropriation for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1908.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, when we adjourned last evening we had reached to the end of line 15 on page 40.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will resume the reading of the bill.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, when we adjourned yester-day we had under consideration the language of the amendment prior to the point in the bill reached in the reading, and I suggested-

Mr. WARREN. I will say to the Senator from Idaho that it is our purpose to pass over the particular amendment which think he has in mind until the reading of the bill is finished. Unless the Senator desires to proceed now, I suggest that we complete the reading of the bill.

Mr. HEYBURN. That is entirely satisfactory to me, but I should like to finish the sentence which I had begun, so that it will appear in the RECORD.

Mr. WARREN. Very well.
Mr. HEYBURN. I had called attention to the fact that the provision of the amendment on lines 17 and 18, on page 39 of the bill, would authorize the granting of less than the regular rates of fare to all employees of the Government. I propose to offer an amendment, when that amendment shall be reached for consideration, striking out the provision with reference to persons other than officers and enlisted men in the Army.

Mr. BURKETT. Do I understand that the amendment on page 39 has been reached?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair would state that the amendment was reached last evening, and was passed over until the completion of the reading of the bill.

Mr. BURKETT. Has a point of order been made against that amendment?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair understands that no point of order has been made.

Mr. BURKETT. Then, I desire to enter a point of order against the amendment.

Mr. WARREN. Perhaps the Senator was not in the Chamber last evening

Mr. BURKETT. I was not when this particular matter was reached.

Mr. WARREN. I will state to the Senator that the amendment was laid over until the finishing of the first reading of the bill for amendment. We are now commencing beyond that point, and will turn back and take up later the amendment to which the Senator refers.

Mr. BURKETT. I merely happened to be out of the Chamber at that moment. I simply want to enter a point of order against that part of the amendment, so that it will be pending when we finally take up the amendment.

Mr. WARREN. I hope the Senator will allow the reading of the bill to proceed.

Mr. BURKETT. I will withhold the point of order, of course, but I want to enter the point of order against the first part of the amendment.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Military Affairs was, on page 41, line 12, to increase the appropriation for clothing and camp and garrison equipage from $3,000,000 to $3,443,-069.28.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the item of appropriation for construction and repair of hospitals, on page 42, line 8, after the word "dollars," to insert "said sum to be made immediately available;" so as to make the proviso read:

Provided, That not to exceed the following sums may be used in the erection and completion of modern sanitary hospitals at the posts named: Fifty thousand dollars at Fort Douglas, Utah; $60,000 at San Juan, P. R.; $45,000 at Fort Mackenzie, Wyo.; $25,000 at Whipple Barracks, Ariz.; $35,000 at Fort Riley, Kans. For the reconstruction and repair of the power house pertaining to the general hospital on the Presidio Military Reservation, San Francisco, Cal., $30,000, said sum to be made immediately available.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 42, after line 12, to insert: Fort Matanzas, Matanzas Inlet, Florida: For the repair thereof, $300.

The amendment was agreed to.

partment," on page 43, line 19, after the word "law," to insert "regulation, or contract;" so as to read:

Medical and Hospital Department: For the purchase of medical and hospital supplies, including disinfectants for military posts, camps, hospitals, hospital ships, and transports; for expenses of medical supply depots; for medical care and treatment not otherwise provided for, including care and subsistence in private hospitals, of officers, enlisted men, and civilian employees of the Army, of applicants for enlistment, and of prisoners of war and other persons in military custody or confinement, when entitled thereto by law, regulation, or contract.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 44, line 21, before the word "dollars," to strike out "twenty-two thousand" and insert "forty-four thousand two hundred and eighty-six;" so as to read.

Provided, That this shall not apply to officers and enlisted men who are treated in private hospitals or by civilian physicians while on furlough; for the proper care and treatment of epidemic and contaglous diseases in the Army or at military posts or stations, including measures to prevent the spread thereof, and the payment of reasonable damages not otherwise provided for, for bedding and clothing injured or destroyed in such prevention; for the pay of male and female nurses, not including the nurse corps (female), and of cooks and other civilians employed for the proper care of sick officers and soldiers, under such regulations fixing their number, qualifications, assignment, pay, and allowances, as shall have been or shall be prescribed by the Secretary of War; for the pay of civilian physicians employed to examine physically applicants for enlistment and enlisted men, and to render other professional services from time to time under proper authority; for the pay of other employees of the Medical Department; for the payment of express companies and local transfers employed directly by the Medical Department for the transportation of medical and hospital supplies including bidders' samples and water for analysis; for supplies for use in teaching the art of cooking to the Hospital Corps; for the supply of the Army and Navy Hospital at Hot Springs, Ark.; for advertising, laundry, and all other necessary miscellaneous expenses of the Medical Department, $644,286.

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 21, page 44, after the word dollars," to insert the following proviso:

Provided, That the Secretary of War may, in his discretion, contract for the care, maintenance, and treatment of the insane natives of the Philippine Islands serving in the Army of the United States at any asylum in the Philippine Islands in all cases which he is now authorized by law to cause to be sent to the Government Hospital for the Insane in the District of Columbia.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Engineer Department," on page 47, line 15, to increase the appropriation for engineer equipment of troops from $40,000 to $50,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 47, line 20, to increase the total appropriation for the maintenance of the Engineer Department from $139,000 to $149,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Ordnance Department," page 48, line 10, after the word "Manufacture," to insert "or purchase;" so as to make the clause read:

Ordnance stores—Ammunition: Manufacture or purchase of ammunition and materials therefor for small arms for reserve supply; ammunition for burials at the National Soldiers' Home in Washington, D. C.; ammunition for firing the morning and evening gun at military posts prescribed by General Orders, No. 70, Headquarters of the Army, dated July 23, 1867, and at National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers and its several Branches, including National Soldiers' Home in Washington, D. C., and Soldiers' and Sailors' State Homes, $648,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 50, after line 3, to insert:

The next amendment was, on page 50, after line 3, to insert:

It shall be the duty of the Secretary of War, whenever a new type of small arm shall have been adopted for the use of the Regular Army, and when a sufficient quantity of such arms shall have been manufactured to constitute, in his discretion, an adequate reserve for the armament of any regular and volunteer forces that it may be found necessary to raise in case of war, to cause the organized militia of the United States to be furnished with small arms of the type so adopted, with bayonets and the necessary accountrements and equipments, including ammunition therefor, at the rate of twenty rounds of ball cartridges for each small arm so issued to the militia: Provided, That such issues shall be made in the manner provided in section 13 of the act approved January 21, 1903, entitled "An act to promote the efficiency of the militia, and for other purposes:" Provided also, That to provide means to carry into effect the provisions of this act the necessary money to cover the cost of exchanging or issuing the new arms, accounterments, equipments, and ammunition to be exchanged or issued there under is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 51, after line 18, to insert:

Whenever the Secretary of War shall deem the enlargement of any military reservation necessary, and the title of the land required for such enlargement shall be in private ownership, the Secretary of War may certify to the Secretary of the Interior the description of such specific tract or tracts of land as he may deem necessary for such purpose, and the Secretary of the Interior may thereupon, with the approval of the President, exchange therefor an equal area of any of the unoccupied, nonmineral, untimbered public land subject to homestead entry, the lands so exchanged to be of substantially equal value.

Mr. CARTEE. Mr. President that is rather an innovation

Mr. CARTER. Mr. President, that is rather an innovation The next amendment was, under the subhead "Medical De- upon the method of acquiring title for the extension of military reservations. I do not understand that any such exigency will arise between sessions of Congress as to require the exercise of this rather singular power of swapping land without any limitation whatever. It can readily be seen that many abuses may spring up or might possibly be indulged in under this

Mr. WARREN. The Senator can hardly say "without restriction" where it requires the approval, first, of the Secretary of War; second, of the Secretary of the Interior, and, third, of the President.

Mr. CARTER. That is as to the procedure. As to the land there is no restriction.

Mr. President, I think it is of great importance to limit to certain definite laws the disposition of the public domain. The amendment proposes to give to one Secretary, who desires to acquire land, the right to deal with another Secretary, who has land of the public domain, and between them to arrange or The extent to which this might reach is not adjust exchanges. material. The method proposed and the principle involved I think are quite objectionable. It is a method of swapping public land for private land, and I do not deem it a very good method.

In order to dispose of the matter, Mr. President, as the amendment is obnoxious to the rule, being general legislation, I make the point of order against it.

Mr. WARREN. Will the Senator withhold the point of order for a moment?

Mr. CARTER. I will be glad to do so.
Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, the design of this amendment is simply to prevent the expenditure of a considerable sum of money in order to straighten out matters as to two or three reservations. For instance, one of the reservations, where the Regular Army and the militia were in camp last year, has an area of some 64,000 acres set apart by the Government for a timber reserve. There are open parks in it, and it was considered better for all concerned that it might be turned over to the War Department as a military reserve, as well as a timber reserve, and be used for a short time each summer for encampments, thus preventing the expenditure of from $1,500,000 to $2,000,000, as has been proposed heretofore for certain encampment grounds.

I think it is within the memory of most of the Senators here although it occurred during the regrettable absence from the Senate of the Senator from Montana [Mr. Carter]—that there was inserted in the Military Academy bill an amendment appropriating something like $2,000,000 to provide for military encampments. That amendment was ruled out on a point of order.

We have near Fort Russell and near Fort Sill, Fort Riley, and, I believe, at one or more other posts large bodies of land under reservation which can be used for encampment purposes. In one case the railroad has two or three sections within the reserve, and two or three settlers also have land included within its limits. In another case, I think, there is some land owned by the railroad and by settlers. The owners are willing to make the exchange, and thus the Government, without expense, would have in compact form this land for encampment purposes. On the other hand, the public domain would not be despoiled. The result of the amendment would simply be to exchange a few sections owned by individuals within reserves for land in other places, acre for acre.

The matter has been considered as a separate proposition by the House and a favorable report made upon it by the Public Lands Committee of that body. I do not know what the Public Lands Committee of the Senate may have done. The Senator from Montana can perhaps inform me. But there is no disposition to despoil or to take advantage of or to unduly extend the reservations at any place. It is not to extend them. It is merely to take out of the center of a body of land owned by the Government now as a reservation certain small parcels of land under private ownership and place them at some other point upon the public domain, so that the three or more cases to which have referred may be covered. That is all there is in the amendment.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. President, as to a particular case I should not make any objection. The Committee on Public Lands of this body has been engaged for some time in an industrious effort to dispose of what is commonly called "the lieu-land policy."
Whether the payment is made in land or in money is a matter of no consequence to the Government.

This amendment contemplates that the land transferred by the Government to a private individual in exchange shall be of equal value, and I warrant now that the private individual will never take land of less value than that surrendered.

In the older States the remarkable situation was finally encountered of obligations outstanding for public land far in excess of the superficial area of the States. I apprehend that this Government will find itself ultimately in just that position with reference to the public domain. We have now outstanding indefinite claims against the public domain on account of various kinds of scrip, the soldiers' additional scrip being the largest unknown quantity.

It has always seemed to me that the public domain should be subject only to definite charges, so that the Government could at all times balance up the claims against the public domain as against the acreage. Unless Congress ultimately determines upon some policy which will reach an accounting, and thus a definite statement of these vague and indefinite outstanding claims, we will ultimately be compelled to appropriate money from the Treasury of the United States to meet the outstanding claims for the public lands which the Government can not satisfy because the public domain will be exhausted.

This is an easy way in which to make a trade as provided by the amendment; but I submit to the Senate that it is infinitely better to have the lands desired appraised in the regular manner, There will be no objection to such proceedings; and let the amounts be paid in cash rather than to arrange for this system of exchanges between the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Interior, notwithstanding the approval of the President.

There is no method provided by the amendment for the appraisement of the land. It must be equal in area, it is true. It is further provided that the exchange must be for land of equal value; but there is no method to determine how that equal value is to be ascertained.

Mr. WARREN. That, of course, can be done under the direction of the proper officers of the Department.

Mr. CARTER. I think, Mr. President, that I shall have to insist on the point of order.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I shall not contest the point of order. I admit that the point of order can be made. I wish to say just a word, however, and that is that this is a move not to involve any obligation on the part of the Government. The Senator can see that under the amendment there will be as much land returned to the public domain as there is taken I will say to the Senator that, while it does not appear on the face of the amendment, it probably would never involve beyond two or three or four small parcels of ground that are now surrounded by Government land, which it is desired shall be used by the Army.

Perhaps it would be better to appraise, condemn, and pay for these lands. I feel, however, that it is my duty, so far as the position in which the Senate has placed me has given me the authority to direct the expenses of the Government, to save as much as I can. The amendment is in the line of saving an expense of some thousands or hundreds of thousands of dollars, as the case may be.

But, Mr. President, I admit that the point of order can be made and that unless it is acceptable as a matter of general good and of economy it must go out, of course; but I appeal to the Senator to allow the matter to be voted on upon its merits.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Montana insist upon his point of order?

Mr. CARTER. I insist upon the point of order. The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair thinks the amendment proposes general legislation, and therefore sustains the point of

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, before going on further with the reading of the bill, I wish to call attention to the amendment on page 50. I was not here, being busy in the conference on the diplomatic appropriation bill when that amendment was reached.

Mr. WARREN. The long amendment?

Mr. HALE. The long amendment. I suppose it is subject to the point of order, because it increases an appropriation upon the bill, but at this time I do not desire to make the point of order, if I can get information as to the amount. It is left indefinite.

It says:

That to provide means to carry into effect the provisions of this act, the necessary money to cover the cost of exchanging or issuing the new arms, accouterments, equipments, and ammunition to be exchanged or issued thereunder is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

I think the Senator will agree with me that that is not a good way to appropriate large sums of money. It is not always practicable to state what a great experiment, as this is, will cost. It will cost a very large sum.

Mr. WARREN. This is not an experiment, I will say to the Senator.

Mr. HALE. It is an experiment so far as authorizing the Department to change all its guns for a new type

Mr. WARREN. No, no. Whenever it-Mr. HALE.

Mr. WARREN. May I say to the Senator that we have had quite a large quantity of Krag-Jörgensen guns in our Regular They have been replaced from time to time by a better arm of American manufacture, called the "late Springfield gun." I believe we have exchanged all or nearly all. We have sold a great many of the Krag-Jörgensens, and have issued the other gun to the States for the militia—used them for the scouts and others—the intent being to arm eventually the entire combative force of the United States with one arm.

Mr. SPOONER. The regular force?
Mr. WARREN. The regular combative force with one arm. The militia of the States—the National Guard—would, of course, become a part of the Army in case of any summons, as was the case in the Spanish war. We are manufacturing a large quantity of these guns every month. It has seemed better authorize here the exchange from time to time. shall have supplied the Regular Army, we then build up a reserve. The question is, Shall we have that reserve in Washington or at other points, packed away—the best guns we have, the Springfield-or shall we issue that reserve to the National Guard—the militia—so that they may be training and drilling in the manual of arms with the same arm they would have if they were in the regular service?

Mr. SPOONER. And in target practice?

Mr. WARREN. And in target practice, and so that the same ammunition may apply. It is in the interest of economy and it is in the interest of efficiency.

Now, what happens? The State of Maine or the State of Wyoming may have a certain number of troops armed with Krag-Jörgensens, and they are willing to turn them in to the Government and get credit and have charged to the appropriations that we have made for them an equal number of Spring-field rifles. Then we will take these Krag-Jörgensens and either hold them in reserve, so that if we should want a very large army we can use them, or we can dispose of them by sale after we have arrived at a point in the manufacture and reservation of Springfields where we feel we have enough for a

In providing for the appropriation, it is merely what may incidentally be expended in effecting these exchanges. It is largely done with the money that is appropriated under another heading to each State for the arming of the militia—the National Guard. We already uniform the National Guard in exactly the same clothing or style of clothing that the Regulars

We want to arm them in the same way.

This is all guarded, as the Senator will notice, so that it can be done only as fast as it is convenient and reasonable for the Government to do.

Mr. HALE. I have succeeded, by reading the amendment, in acquiring the valuable knowledge and information which the Senator has stated. My point was to ask the Senator how much this exchange, as applied to the militia, is likely to involve, if he knows? Could he put in the bill a limitation? We sometimes make these general appropriations, saying not to exceed a certain sum. Now, does the Senator know—that is the only thing upon which the amendment does not inform us how much it is likely to require?

Mr. BURKETT. If the Senator from Maine will permit me, the amendment says:

Whenever a new type of small arm shall have been adopted for the use of the Regular Army.

It seems they do change the kind of small arm, and if you leave the amount unlimited, the number of the militia might not be the limit to the amount of money we would spend, for they could change the arm, and go on indefinitely, for this is to be a general law, and, of course, is to go on indefinitely.

Mr. HALE. Undoubtedly they can change it at any time.

Mr. BURKETT. So you can not tell what the amount will be. Mr. BACON. Mr. President— Mr. BACON.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Wyoming yield to the Senator from Georgia? Mr. WARREN. The Senator from Maine has the floor.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Maine yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. HALE. Certainly. Mr. BACON. I should like to ask the Senator from Maine whether I am correct in my understanding of this language from his standpoint, and also the Senator from Wyoming. I do not understand this provision to contemplate the payment for the manufacture of the arms. It is simply, if I read it correctly, to defray the expense incurred in the process of exchanging and of issuing the arms.

Mr. WARREN. That is what it states.
Mr. BACON. It can not be any very large expense. If it involved the payment of the cost of the manufacture of the arms to be issued, then the suggestion of the Senator from Maine would be a very important one, because it might be a very large amount. But this does not, if I read it correctly, contemplate anything of the kind. It does not relate to the cost of the arms

Mr. WARREN. The Senator from Georgia is correct. Mr. BACON. It relates simply to the expense incurred in the process of exchanging the one for the other or in the issuing of the one, as the case may be. It seems to me, from the reading of the proposed law, that that would be the entire expense that could be incurred.

Mr. HALE. I will ask the Senator the same old question, whether he or the committee has any idea how much it will cost? The Senator understands that this is not a good way generally to appropriate. He is a veteran member not only of this committee, but of the Appropriations Committee.

Mr. WARREN. That is entirely true, and the reason why the sum asked for this purpose is not put in is that we could not ascertain whether there would be anything needed in the next year or whether there might be a small sum. I would be glad, if the Senator from Maine has in mind some sum, to stipulate it.

Mr. HALE. No; I do not know anything about it. Mr. WARREN. I feel it is entirely safe, however, as it provides for no expenditure except that necessary in carrying out the exchange.

Mr. HALE. If the Senator is confident that the appropriation will be very small—

Mr. WARREN. I admit that the Senator from Maine is perfectly right. There should be a specific amount named, if posterily right. But this seemed to be a case where we could waive that.

Mr. ALLISON. This is a continuing appropriation. It needs no legislation hereafter, in order to carry an appropriation. year from now the Department can go on and do this, unless the law is repealed.

Mr. SPOONER. If it does not work right it can be changed next year.

Mr. WARREN. It could only proceed as far as the organized militia is concerned.

Mr. ALLISON. I do not see the necessity of the appropria-

Mr. WARREN. If the Senator thinks it safer, I am perfectly willing to accept an amendment to cut the appropriation part We can provide for it hereafter.

Mr. ALLISON. We make appropriations every year for the Army

Mr. WARREN. It is perfectly acceptable. Will the Senator dictate an amendment. Strike out the last proviso. Mr. ALLISON.

Mr. HALE. Strike out the last proviso. That will cover it. Mr. ALLISON. Is it proposed to exchange arms during the

Mr. WARREN. I think so, to some extent. I think it would be better to allow a small amount for the current year. Yet I am so confident we will get information later-

Mr. ALLISON. We must appropriate for the Army at least once in two years.

Let the proviso be stricken out, as suggested. The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, the amendment will be regarded as open to amendment. The Senator from Maine proposes an amendment to the amendment, which will be stated.

The Secretary. It is proposed to strike out the last proviso, after the word "purposes," in line 19.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BURKETT. Mr. President, I do not understand this pro-

And when a sufficient quantity of such arms shall have been manufactured to constitute, in his discretion, an adequate reserve for the armament of any regular and volunteer forces that it may be found necessary to raise in case of war, to cause the organized militia of the United States to be furnished with small arms of the type so adopted.

I do not understand what that is or what it amounts to.

Mr. WARREN. That depends upon circumstances. If we were at war we might have a small reserve.

Mr. SPOONER. It explains itself. It says:

An adequate reserve for the armament of any regular and volunteer forces that it may be found necessary to raise in case of war.

Mr. BURKETT. That is the very reason why I asked the

Mr. WARREN. There is always a certain percentage for contingencies, the reserve of a few hundred or a few thousand, so that breakage can be made up. That is all.

Mr. BURKETT. Is there any legislation, aside from this, to enable the Secretary of War to have a suitable reserve of arms?

Mr. WARREN. That is one of the fundamental principles, and ought to be one of the fundamental laws, you may say, ef the War Department. There is too great a necessity and too much legislation on the subject to explain it here, of course.

Mr. BURKETT. That is very true; and I am asking the Senator about it that I may have the information. We are by Innuendo here, it seems to me, giving even more authority than ever we specially legislated. If there is no limit except the limit of propriety, if there is no limit in the statute, if there is no law on the book in this matter enabling him to keep a reserve of arms, such as he may deem advisable, we are putting that authority in this bill. I am perfectly willing to give the Secretary of War authority to supply the militia with arms. think we ought to do that. But I do not very much like the idea of permitting him to change the type of the arms without let or hindrance quite as often as he might change it when some little improvement comes up.

But it does seem to me that we are by innuendo legislating him authority which perhaps he has not had, and an authority that may be construed to mean a great deal more than the Secretary of War should have, not with the present Secretary, or possibly with any Secretary of War that we may ever have.

Mr. WARREN. That is all guarded by the appropriations each year. There is a specific amount appropriated for each specific purpose. That is all guarded each year, not in this bill. It is in the bill for fortifications.

Mr. BURKETT. Yet with the provision as it was in here, the amount was unlimited in the first place, and it seems to me it is as the bill stands. The appropriation is unlimited.

There is no appropriation at all. Mr. BACON.

Mr. WARREN. The Senator surely does not mean exactly hat he says. There is a natural limit, that of the expense of what he says. exchanging with the militia, and the militia is limited by the number now enrolled. Surely there is one limit, if no other.

BURKETT. I will ask the Senator what reserve there is of the present small arms.

Mr. WARREN. I will answer that by saying that at the time of the outbreak of the Spanish war there was not perhaps reserve powder enough to load just once the guns this country owned, large and small, and there were not guns enough to organize an army of 20,000 additional men until we went abroad and bought them, and the Senate voted $50,000,000 in a bunch, en bloc, with which to buy powder and ball and guns, because we had no reserve.

Mr. BURKETT. I submit that is not an answer to my question as to the present condition. We know the condition we were in then; and if the Secretary of War had this authority conferred upon him under general principles, as the Senator suggested, I submit that the Secretaries of War had not been doing their duty. I will ask a question-Mr. WARREN. Congress had refus Congress had refused to give them the money with which to do their duty. It was not the fault of the officers of the Government. It was the fault of Congress. Congress would not appropriate money enough.

Mr. BURKETT. Does the Senator know how many they have now?

Mr. WARREN. It is not the duty of the Senator from Wyoming to count the guns in the reserve that the Government has. It has practically no reserve except the guns that are in the hands of the State militia and the Army. When I say "practically," of course there may be a few thousand, but there is no great stock of arms. We are manufacturing these guns every day in the week, except holidays and Sundays. We are manufacturing them in quantities to make up the loss and wear and tear, and we hope to make them fast enough so that in the next fifteen or twenty years we will be able to exchange with the militia, so that the militia and the volunteer forces and forces shall have the same kind of arms.

Mr. BURKETT. Mr. President-

Mr. WARREN. I will go a little further, and I will ask the Senator from Nebraska if he thinks it would be a good thing for me, as chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs, to state from my place in the Senate, so that all the world, all the foreign countries, might know, just how much of powder and ball and guns we have in the reserve?

Mr. BURKETT. I will say to the Senator that if he does not think it is wise or if he does not know, he could answer it either way. I have not sought in any way to cross-question the Senator. I am sorry he shows any irritation in the

Mr. WARREN. I have no irritation in answering the Senator.

Mr. BURKETT. I submit that his replies have been really a sort of lecture rather than any attempt to answer the question. But I will say to the Senator that while I am here I will reserve the right to ask any question that I may see fit, and if the Senator does not know how to answer it, he may say he does not know how to answer. If he does not think it is proper to answer the question, he can reply in that But he can not lecture me as to the sort of questions shall ask him, so long as I keep within the rules of the Senate.

Mr. WARREN. I have not attempted to lecture the Senator.

Mr. BURKETT. I will leave that simply as it is now. still insist that as the committee brought the bill before the Senate, it does leave a greater loophole for the purchase of guns in the matter of reserve than those to be supplied to the militia, and I desired to know if there is any law for that reserve or if there was any limit to that reserve. ator does not choose to answer, I have nothing more to say.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee as amended.

The amendment as amended was agreed to. The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Military Affairs was, on page 52, after line 10, to insert:

The Secretary of War is hereby authorized to loan to the Jamestown Ter-Centennial Commission certain tents and camp equipage which have been used in the military service for the purpose of providing shelter for visiting commands of the organized militia and for detachments of foreign troops and marines: Provided, That such tents and camp equipage shall be returned to the proper bureau of the War Department within thirty days after the close of the Ter-Centennial Exposition: Provided further, That said commission shall indemnify the War Department for any loss or damage to said tents and camp equipage not necessarily incident to such use: Provided also, That the said commission shall give a bond with security satisfactory to the Secretary of War to conform to the conditions and requirements hereinbefore imposed. And the action of the commanding general of the United States forces in Cuba in furnishing tents, camp equipage, and quartermaster's stores for the use of the sufferers by earthquake and fire in the city of Kingston, Jamaica, with the approval of the Secretary of War, is hereby ratified and confirmed.

Mr. WARREN. I wish to perfect the amendment. I move

Mr. WARREN. I wish to perfect the amendment. I move to strike out all of line 13 after the word "equipage" and to insert in lieu thereof the words "in the custody of the War Department which have had prior use."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Wyoming proposes an amendment to the amendment, which will be stated.

The Secretary. On page 52 strike out all of line 13 after the word "equipage," as follows, "which have been used in the military service," and insert in lieu thereof "in the custody of the War Department which have had prior use.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was concluded.

Mr. HALE. I was not present yesterday afternoon when the bill was considered, being engaged in conference on the diplomatic appropriation bill. But in reading the debate I see it was stated by the Senator from Wyoming that an opportunity, of course, would be had to go back. I wish to return to page 34, lines 12, 13, 14, and 15. The subject-matter of providing for Army posts has always been considered in the sundry civil appropriation bill, and the committee deals with all of these in that bill. Therefore, without formally making a point of order, which I could do as a new subject of appropriation, I ask that the amendment may be disagreed to, not in any hostility, because I think it is a meritorious provision, but that it may be considered by the committee which deals with all such ques-

Mr. MALLORY. I did not catch what the Senator from Maine said. I should like to inquire what is the ground on which he bases his objection?

Mr. HALE. That all of these matters for the purchase of land for Army posts are considered on the sundry civil appropriation bill by the Appropriations Committee, and it is better that they should all be in that bill. Therefore I am asking the Senator from Wyoming, without making a formal point of order, which I could make, that the amendment may go out, and the Committee on Appropriations on the sundry civil bill will consider it. I have no doubt it is a meritorious proposition, but we ought not to divide these Army posts around in different appropriation bills.

Mr. WARREN. The Senator from Maine has stated the case exactly as it is. Of course this item was estimated for and was estimated under a heading that would naturally bring it in this bill, and it was put in.

It is true, however, that these appropriations for large sums, for expenditures for buildings, more than $20,000 each, belong in the sundry civil appropriation bill, and in the sundry civil appropriation bill, in connection with these appropriations, it is usual to provide that none of the appropriation therein contained shall be expended for land except as directed and stated, and then the posts are enumerated where land may be bought.

I will say that the Committee on Military Affairs were a unit as to the necessity of this appropriation, and I trust, in fact I believe, that should we strike it out the general Committee on Appropriations will take it up and provide for it in another bill.

Mr. HALE. I have no doubt that will be done. But the Senator sees as I do that instead of dividing these around in different appropriation bills we ought to keep them all to-

Mr. WARREN. I assume the Senator from Maine proposes to leave in the next amendment?

Mr. HALE. I do not deal at all with that, because it is subject to a different consideration.

VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, the vote by which the amendment between lines 12 and 15, on page 34, was agreed to will be reconsidered.

Mr. TALIAFERRO. I wish to state that after hearing the statement of the Senator from Maine and also the statement of the Senator from Wyoming, both of whom are on the Committee on Appropriations, I shall not resist the proposition of the Senator from Maine to have this amendment disagreed to. But I do not understand how a point of order would lie against the proposition when it comes into the Senate as a regular estimate from one of the Departments, properly directed to the committee that brings in this bill, and has been by that committee regularly incorporated in the bill. It seemed to me that under those circumstances the matter would be in order on the Army bill.

It is a very important provision. The Secretary of War heartily concurs in it and recommends it. But rather than detain the Senate by a discussion or resistance of the suggestion of the Senator from Maine at this time, I will consent that the provision objected to may go out, retaining that part of the amendment from line 16 to 24.

Mr. HALE. I do not make any request as to the next amend-

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, the amendment

I should like to ask the Senator from Wyoming Mr. BACON. a question, as I understand he is now through with the amendmeats proposed by the committee. It is a point on which I think w ought to have some information. I ask him whether or not in the appropriation for the expense of the Army there is included the increased cost of the Army by reason of the occupa-tion of Cuba by a part of our forces? I wish to know, if possible, to what extent this appropriation bill has been swelled by such expenses as may become necessary on account of that occupation.

Mr. WARREN. I am very glad to answer that question. The bill contains only $50,000 that is directly caused by the occupation of Cuba, and it is for the Signal Corps. The Department estimated for $100,000 for the following year, on account of the occupation of Cuba, and the committee thought that $50,000 was enough. But the Senator will bear in mind that this bill is for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1908

Mr. BACON. I understand that fully.

Mr. WARREN. And that the expenses now accruing must come up in a different way.

Mr. BACON. I do not misunderstand that proposition at all. Mr. WARREN. I suppose the Senator could perhaps estimate the expenses about as well as I. Of course all the troops are under regular pay anyway, whether they are here or whether they are there. There is the cost of transportation there and back, an estimate of which I have not at hand. Naturally that would not come up in relation to this bill.

Mr. BACON. Of course the Senator can hardly consider that I have overlooked the fact that this bill contains appropriations for the ensuing fiscal year and does not in any manner relate to the expenses of the current fiscal year.

Mr. WARREN. Perhaps I could answer in this way, then. I do not know of any estimates contained in this bill for the coming year other than the one I mentioned. That is the only one I know of Mr. BACON. What I want to ascertain is whether, when the War Department laid before the Committee on Military Affairs the estimates for the expenses of the Army for the ensuing year, there was brought to the attention of the committee the increased expenses which will be devolved upon that Department by reason of the occupation of Cuba, which, of course, is somewhat indefinite as to its duration. I simply want to know for information whether the executive department has communicated to the legislative department through this committee any information on that subject.

Mr. WARREN. We have had no estimates before the committee for the reasons I have stated. I assume, for instance, there is increased expense in one matter-transportation. Of course the subsistence, the clothing, and the pay proper would

I want to make myself plain. As to transportation, that is involved with so many other things-the rate law and others that all we can judge from is whether the amount for transportation is larger or smaller than last year. We have only made it enough larger, and hardly that, to cover the additional troops we have authorized through the artillery bill. We have not added anything on account of Cuba.

Mr. BACON. The Senator misunderstands the point of my inquiry entirely. I am not asking the Senator to give me an I am trying to find out whether in the information which is given to that committee by the executive department there has been any effort to enlighten Congress, through the committee, on the question as to how much increased expense there is, or will be, rather, on account of that occupation, so far as can be anticipated for the ensuing year.

I intended to follow it up with another question, but the Senator goes on into a supposition that I am trying to get from him an estimate. I am not. I want to know whether or not there has been any communication of this information from the War Department.

I have answered that directly—that we have Mr. WARREN. no information whatever in the committee, that I am aware of, that there were any other expenses there, except by inference, than in the Signal Service, nor have we asked for any, because it was a subject which would not be considered in connection with this bill, and we have attended to such matters at present as pertain particularly to this bill.

Mr. BACON. In the question of the transportation of Mr. WARREN. As I said a moment ago, the transportation of troops in the matter of Cuba is not included in any manner in the estimates.

Mr. BACON. That is what I want the Senator to state, because the Senator must know that necessarily in the appropriation there must be included what would be necessary for the transportation of men and of supplies, and I am simply trying in the simplest way possible to get the information.

Mr. WARREN. I understand the Senator, and I want to give him the information.

Mr. BACON. The Senator does not answer me directly. am just trying to get from the Senator, if I can, the information whether or not the War Department communicated to the committee an estimate of how much of increased expense there will be on account of this occupation. I am not trying to get the Senator to tell me how much it will be as a matter of personal estimate of estimate of the committee. I understand from the Senator that there has been no such communication from the War Department.

Is the Senator through and ready to wait Mr WARREN for an answer?

Mr. BACON. Except as to the Signal Service.

Mr. WARREN. Is the Senator ready for me to answer?

Mr. BACON. Certainly; I am through.

I answer that there has been no estimate Mr. WARREN. whatever particularly for Cuba. If the Senator will permit me, will go further and say that in transportation there may be no reason for it, because the removal of troops for many, many years has been considered necessary or advisable about once in a certain period from post to post. The removal of troops from a post here in the United States to Cuba and from there back to some other post might not possibly cost more than the direct removal across the country. Therefore, so far there has been removal across the country. Therefore, so far there has been no appreciable expenditure because of the occupation of Cuba. I think myself there will be more if we shall maintain a force there in the coming year.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, the object I had in asking that question was not to get, as I said before, the estimate of the Senator, but to find out to what extent the executive department is taking into its confidence the legislative department in regard to this Cuban matter.

As I understand by way of possible inference from what the Senator has said, there has been no communication to the committee, as there certainly has been none to Congress that has fallen under my notice, of the amount of expenditure which has already been made from which a legitimate inference can be drawn as to how much expenditure there will be in the future.

I am frank to say that I have not been entirely satisfied with the attitude in this matter of the executive and of the legislative branches. I think that Congress has been remiss in acquiescing in this assumption. The question of the proper action of this Government toward Cuba is, in my opinion, not one which rests exclusively and solely in the determination of the executive department. I think it is one which should most particularly and emphatically belong to the lawmaking power. Otherwise the executive department is clothed in this regard with the most unlimited, unrestrained, and autocratic power.
While I have not myself called the attention of the Senate to this omission by Congress, because there were many delicate considerations which would possibly require that we would pass by things which we did not think are entirely in accord with the theory upon which our Government is based, and the practices which it has always heretofore observed, at the same time I have not been unmindful of the fact that from my point of view Congress was not taking the part in this matter which it should. I am frank to say that I do not find in any legislation which we have had so far any authority devolving upon the executive department of the entire determination of all the questions which relate to the occupation of Cuba, the setting up of a government in Cuba without any authority on the part of Congress, with unlimited power; power to make law, power to set aside law, power to dissolve parliament, power to call parliament.

As I said, I do not propose to go into that question; but I think it would be unfortunate, Mr. President, if this Congress should expire and there be no word uttered in either branch of Congress to indicate that Congress thought it had the power and the right and the duty to prescribe what should be the action of this Government in Cuba, and that on the contrary it understood that it was a matter which, without any special delegation of power on the part of Congress, devolved it exclusively upon the Executive and without reference to any opinion of Congress or any action of Congress.

Mr. President, I do not intend to go at length into this matter and I do not desire to discuss it, but I simply discharge the duty which I think devolves upon me, as I see it, no more than upon any other Senator, to take the opportunity that this utterance shall be made in order that it may not, through our silence, be considered as a continued recognized fact that in such matters Congress has no voice and that it is a matter exclusively for the functions and offices of the executive department.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President, in connection with what the Senator from Georgia has just said about the conditions in Cuba, I should like to make an inquiry. I hardly know from whom to make it, because the Senator in charge of the bill has indicated that he has not been taken into the confidence of the War Department in this matter. Therefore I expect to direct my inquiry to the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. WARREN. I hope the Scnator will not put me in the position of saying or assuming or allowing that I have been debarred from the confidence of the War Department or the Ex-

Mr. TILLMAN. I do not understand the Senator. Mr. WARREN. The Senator said I had not been taken into the confidence of the War Department, as I understood him.

Mr. TILLMAN. In regard to the expenditures about which the Senator from Georgia has been making inquiry.

Mr. WARREN.

The Senator did not qualify it.
That is what I meant, of course. Mr. TILLMAN. want to put the Senator in any false attitude or to indicate that he is not absolutely in the confidence of the War Department.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I undertook to say then, and I want to repeat now, that I know of no reason why we should have asked or why there should have been sent to my committee the matter of expenses in Cuba just at this time, that did not pertain to this bill or to provisions to be made, because they would naturally go for the present year into the deficiency bill and would not come to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. TILLMAN. I said I thought the inquiry had better be made of the Committee on Foreign Relations. I had taken cognizance of the fact that the Senator in charge of the bill did not feel that he was qualified or called on to say anything.

Mr. CULLOM. Does the Senator put a question to me?

Mr. TILLMAN. The inquiry I wish to make is simply this:

Has the Senator any information as to when we will get out of Cuba again, if ever?

Mr. CULLOM. None whatever.
Mr. TILLMAN. Then is the Senator prepared to explain why it is that the Engineer Corps of the United States Army—I think I saw it stated two companies had been ordered there within the last week or two-are making a survey of a foreign country?

Mr. CULLOM. I have no information on that subject, either. The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from South Carolina ill suspend. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated by the Secretary

Mr. CLAPP. I ask that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The Senator from South Carolina will proceed.

Mr. TILLMAN. Then, Mr. President, in pursuit of information from somebody, if anyone here is qualified, I would ask the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations whether there has been any communication whatever to his committee in regard to the present status in Cuba?

Mr. CULLOM. Nothing whatever has been received from the War Department or any other Government official on that subject, except what is in the messages of the President.

Mr. TILLMAN. Then I want to express the humble opinion that it seems to me a little odd our Committee on Foreign Relations does not itself take the initiative to get some information in regard to the anomalous condition now existing in Cuba.

For instance, I saw in another paper some days ago a statement coming from Georgia that a distinguished cifizen of that State, a bishop of the Methodist Church, who has recently been on a pastoral journey in the island, returned home and made a report something to this effect: That Secretary Taft, while in Habana, had issued an order regarding the insurrectionists, or rebels, or patriots, or whatever other aggregation of ragamuffins it was who run Palma's government in the ground, or up a tree, and made him call for help—that Secretary Taft had issued an order under which private property had been seized; and an illustration or an incident was given of some person down there who owned a very fine stallion. A negro stole the horse, joined the rebels, or the insurrectionists, and under Secretary Taft's order the property in the possession of these rebels, or patriots, whichever you term them, was left in their charge without regard to whether they came by it honestly or not; and the man who bought the horse, who imported him from the United States, sees his horse every day in the possession of this negro patriot and he can not claim him. The Secretary of War has given this fellow title to it, and nobody is allowed to interfere or to take any cognizance of this remarkable transaction.

Now, when our Army engineers are surveying the island—a very necessary thing probably after a while when we get to having a good deal of war down there and we shall have to see how we shall stop these negroes from interfering with sugar plantations-I say it is a little odd that Congress, the Senate, that nobody seems to think it worth while to make any inquiry or get in communication with the War Department or understand why all these remarkable transactions are being carried

While I, of course, have no purpose or desire to criticise the committee or to suggest what it shall do, I call attention to these little transactions, which are to me strange and need some explanation.

Mr. CULLOM. Will the Senator allow me?

Certainly.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. CULLOM. The President of the United States himself in his messages told us all about the condition in Cuba at the beginning of the present session, and I assume that the thing is going along about as it was when he reported to us. We need nothing from him or anybody else, except to try to straighten out matters down there, until something occurs that requires him to give or justifies him in giving us another account of the situation. I think the condition is about the same as it has been for some months, and I am sorry to say that it does not appear to have quieted or settled down in any way.

Mr. TILLMAN. I have not read in the newspapers of a solitary instance of any recent outbreak or any bloodshed or any assembling of dissatisfied elements or people who do not like the existing status. I confess I would like to know when we are going to have an election down there and whether we are coming away at all or not.

Mr. CULLOM. The Senator will find out in due time, I have no doubt.

Mr. TILLMAN. I suppose we will, from the overlord at the White House, whose agent goes down there and destroys private property by Executive order, gives a negro a horse belonging to another man, and various other things like that. If that sort of thing goes on, it is no wender that the Executive at the White House feels that Congress has no concern and no interest in the matter and no business with it. I reckon after a little we will be told it is none of our business.

Of course, if I can not get any information from the committee about this negro stealing the horse, as to why General Taft felt called upon to make an order of that extraordinary character, I will have to subside and wait for light in the future, after it is all over; but I presume, speaking seriously, that when the bill comes in for the settlement of these matters the Senate will very humbly and in a proper spirit of humility appropriate the money without a word, and we will pay for this very same horse and a good many other things

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, I understand the amendment on page 39 is pending.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It was passed over.

Mr. WARREN. It is now pending. One or two Senators have contemplated offering amendments.

Mr. NELSON. I desire to offer an amendment to it. After the word "men," in line 18, page 39, I move to insert the words of the Army, Navy, and the Revenue-Cutter Service;" so as to read: "or to prohibit the transportation of officers and enlisted men of the Army, Navy, and the Revenue-Cutter Service.

Mr. WARREN. I assume the Senator expects to include the marines under the head of the Navy.

Mr. NELSON. Yes, sir.
Mr. WARREN. I have no objection to the amendment.
Mr. NELSON. My object is to include the men in the Revenue-Cutter Service.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment of the Senator from Minnesota will be stated.

The Secretary. On page 39, line 18, after the word "men," insert "of the Army, Navy, and the Revenue-Cutter Service."

Mr. PERKINS. I desire to add "and the members of the Coast and Geodetic Survey."

Mr. WARREN. Are they any part of the Navy?

Mr. PERKINS. No; but they are doing as much for commerce and navigation as any other Department of our Government, and I think we should include the members of the Coast and Geodetic Survey.

Mr. WARREN. Does the Senator from Minnesota accept the amendment suggested by the Senator from California?

Mr. NELSON. I accept that amendment to the amendment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment to the amendment will be read as modified.

The Secretary. After the word "men," in line 18, insert "of the Army, Navy, the Revenue-Cutter Service, and the members of the Coast and Geodetic Survey.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. TALIAFERRO. Are amendments to the bill in order

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The committee amendment is now under consideration as amended.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President—
The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Idaho rise to the pending amendment?

Mr. HEYBURN. Yes; I rise to offer an amendment to the pending amendment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Idaho proposes an amendment, which will be stated.

The Secretary. On page 39, line 16, after the word "rates," strike out the words "to the Government."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Idaho to the amend-

Mr. CLAPP. I should like to have an explanation of that amendment to the amendment.

Mr. HEYBURN. I will explain it, with the permission of the Senate. The amendment just read is proposed to be followed by one striking out, on line 17, after the word "transportation," down to and including the word "transportation" on line 18, and on line 19, by inserting, after the word "rates," the words "when traveling under official orders."

Mr. CLAPP. I shall object to that, Mr. President. Mr. HEYBURN. The effect of this amendment is that it confines the exception to the interstate-commerce act to officers and enlisted men in the service of the United States. I propose to strike out the words "to the Government," in line 16, in order that this exception may be allowed to the officers and enlisted men without going through the Department at Washington in every case, and I have provided for that by inserting "when traveling under official orders." The effect of that would be that if an order were telegraphed to a body of troops on the Pacific coast, for instance, to be transferred to Texas, they would be entitled to receive the transportation upon application at the point from which they move without waiting for the matter to be presented by the Government to the railroad company. In other words, the railroad company could not urge against an application for immediate transportation that they were prohibited from granting it under the provisions of the interstate-commerce act. It renders the movement of troops more readily controlled and managed by the officers where the movement is to take place. The other portion of the amendment, which is to strike out on lines 17 and 18, eliminates from this measure all persons or property other than officers or men in the military service of the United States

As the amendment was proposed originally, it would have permitted the Government to make terms with the transportation company for all Government employees, civil and military, because of the way the sentence is framed. I am quite sure it was not the intentien of the committee reporting this amendment, nor would it meet with the approval of the Senate, that we should repeal the interstate-commerce act to the extent of permitting the Government of the United States, through whatever source it might act, entering into a contract with the railroad companies that would give either free or cheaper transportation to its employees generally. The term "persons or property" would cover every class of employees of the Govern-ment. That certainly was not intended.

The other amendment is simply to make that effective. The amendment proposing to strike out the words "to the Government" is merely intended to make it more convenient for the commanding officer at headquarters, wherever the order may be received, to immediately make the arrangement. For instance, in a time of emergency, where it was necessary to secure the immediate transportation of troops to quell a riot or on some great emergency that might arise, it would be very important that the commanding officer should have a right to arrange for transportation without waiting for Government action through official headquarters.

Mr. President, another suggestion important to be considered in connection with this proposed amendment is this: The Government of the United States, being the representative of all the people on all financial matters, anything that is paid out of the Treasury is paid by all the people, and I do not think it was intended that the Government of the United States should be in any way limited by the interstate-commerce act in the doing of anything that was for the general benefit of the people financially or otherwise. It was the Government that was acting for the purpose of an equal and even distribution of privileges and rights to all the people individually; but when all the people are interested, if they did not reserve the right, it should have been done, for the Government to make any contract for the benefit of all the people in the way of cheaper transportation of men or of commodities.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President-

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. HEYBURN. Yes.

Mr. CLAPP. If I understand, the Senator's amendment is to strike out the word "Government," in line 16.

Mr. HEYBURN. The only purpose of that-Mr. CLAPP. I am only asking for information.

Mr. HEYBURN. I propose to strike out three words, but it is for the purpose of incorporating the same sentiment in better language, on line 19, by inserting the words "when traveling under official orders."

Mr. CLAPP.

Mr. HEYBURN. It substitutes action by the commanding officer for action through the War Department at Washington, in the interest of expedition. That is the purpose. It is merely in the interest of expedition. That a question of the method of doing it.

Mr. FULTON. Do I understand the Senator to apply his amendment limiting the operation of this provision to the Army?

Mr. HEYBURN. To the Army.

Mr. HEYBURN. To the Army.

Mr. FULTON. To the officers and enlisted men of the Army? Mr. HEYBURN. To the officers and enlisted men of the Army

Mr. FULTON. Why should it not apply to the Navy as well?
Mr. HEYBURN. This is not a naval appropriation bill. I think that probably when the naval bill comes here—

Mr. WARREN. I will simply say that I suppose that matter will be included in the naval appropriation bill.

Mr. HEYBURN. Yes. In any event, I should think that would be more properly taken care of in a bill providing for the government of the Navy. Of course the amendment as amended has not yet been acted upon, and it is subject to a point of order; but in order that it may be presented in the best form before the point of order is insisted upon I have offered this amendment.

Mr. CLAPP obtained the floor.

Mr. SPOONER. Before the Senator from Minnesota proceeds, will be permit me to ask to have the three or four lines read as proposed to be amended?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Minnesota rise to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Idaho [Mr. HEYBURN]

Mr. CLAPP. I do.

Mr. SPOONER. I ask the Senator from Minnesota to yield for the moment in order that the lines proposed to be amended

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the amendment proposed by the Senator from Idaho [Mr. HEYBURN]

The Secretary. It is proposed in the amendment of the The Secretary, it is proposed in the amendment of the committee on page 39, line 16, after the word "rates," to strike out the words "to the Government;" after the word "transportation," in line 17, to strike out the words "of persons or property, or to prohibit the transportation;" and in line 19, after the word "rates," to insert the words "when traveling under official orders;" so that if amended that part of the amendment would read:

Provided further, That nothing in the act of Congress entitled "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act to regulate commerce,' approved February 4, 1887, and all acts amendatory thereof, and to enlarge the powers of the Interstate Commerce Commission," approved June 29, 1906, shall be held to prohibit the allowance of reduced rates for the transportation of officers and enlisted men of the Army and Navy, the Revenue-Cutter Service, and the members of the Coast and Geodetic Survey in the service of the United States and their families at reduced rates when traveling under official orders.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President, all I care to say on that subject is this: Of course, this amendment ought not to be in this bill; it is not the proper way to amend the interstate-commerce law; but conceding that there should be an amendment, I am in favor of an amendment that goes to the benefit of the United States Government. That is why I object to striking out the words "reduced rates to the Government." The Government should get these reduced rates. The Government can make its contract with the railroad, and then it eliminates the suggestion of an entering wedge here for a class of people, on their own responsibility, although under cover of official service, coming as an entering wedge into the law which we passed last spring; and unless it can be distinctly limited to negotiations between the Government and the railroads for the transportation of persons and property of those in the service of the Government-I do not care how many services you include—I shall make the point of order against the amendment.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I made the point of order yesterday against this provision. Some Senators have spoken to me, expressing a desire that the point of order be not insisted upon if the provision could be so amended as to meet with general approval. It can not be amended, Mr. President, in any way to meet my approval so long as it allows the Government. or any person or any officer, any privileges that are not accorded to every American citizen. I do not regard the Government as standing in any better position to secure special legislation in its favor than I do the position of any individual or society seeking special legislation in his or its favor. For that reason, Mr. President, I am opposed to it. We labored strenuously a year ago, all through the long months of the winter and along into the summer, to enact a railroad rate bill. We finally secured the passage of a bill which I believe to be a very good one. ably one of the best provisions there in that law is the provision against any railway company granting any special privliege to any class, either in the transportation of persons or the transportation of freight. That, Mr. President, was the very life and spirit of that whole enactment.

Mr. FULTON. Mr. President-

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. McCUMBER. I do.

Mr. FULTON. I confess I can not understand how the Senator contends-perhaps he can explain it-that this amendment would operate against the interests of the people. When you give the Government preferential rates, reduced rates, are you not, in effect, giving them to the people? How can it be contended that that operates to the disadvantage of the people when the people have to pay the rates?

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, that is not the extent of the amendment we are considering; but I will answer the Senator in this way: What is paid by the Government is from taxes levied equally on all classes of the people—not especially upon one class, but equally upon all classes of people—either by a direct tax or by the other method of securing Government funds. This applies to the matter of transportation alone. The traveling public, the public that are compelled to do the traveling, must pay ultimately the difference; the people who pay for freight must ultimately pay the difference in freight be-tween what is a reasonable compensation and what the Gov-In other words, if the Government gets its ernment pays. freight for nothing, the people who pay for freight must pay the difference, and if the Government officials and others travel for nothing the traveling public must pay the difference.
Mr. FULTON. Who pays it?

Mr. WARREN. Who is the Government?

Mr. McCUMBER. I stated to the Senator-and I presume that he understands it—that we pay it by general taxation against all the people; but if I pay general taxes and I do not travel I am not paying the difference between the Government getting its transportation free and I having to pay for my own.

Mr. FULTON. If the transportation under regular rates, we will say, costs the Government the sum of $50,000,000 per annum, and by the reduced rate proposed by this amendment it will only cost the Government $25,000,000, would not the taxation be less for the people?

Mr. WARREN. It does not necessarily follow that rates are

Mr. FULTON. But the Senator from North Dakota is talking about a reduced rate to the Government, and I am assuming that it is a reduced rate. My question implies that I believe that the reduced rate to the Government is a reduced rate to the people of the Government.

Mr. McCUMBER. A reduced rate to the Government is a reduced rate to a portion of the people of the Government; and that is what I have tried to make clear to the Senator.

Mr. WARREN. If the Senator will allow me right there-

Mr. McCUMBER. Let me make that clear.

Mr. WARREN. Very well.

Mr. McCUMBER. The railways, in order to pay their dividends and their running expenses, must receive the money from those who use their traveling facilities. They do not collect it from those who do not use those facilities. Therefore, if they must raise $25,000,000 additional, they must raise it, not from the man who does not travel, but they have got to raise it from the traveling public; and that completely answers the assertion of the Senator.

Mr. SPOONER. Is the Government any more than an agency of the people for the transaction of the people's business? The Government can not be called a "class," as contradistinguished from the people; it is a mere agency to carry on the affairs of the people, constituted by the people, instituted by the people, and maintained by the people.

Mr. SCOTT. The Senator from North Dakota is one of the people.

Mr. SPOONER. No; he is one of the Government; he is not one of the people. Is it a fair illustration of the principle for which the Senator is contending—equality among shippers?

Mr. McCUMBER. I think it is. The equality among shippers pertains to an equality not among all of the people, but to equality among the shippers. If the Government becomes a shipper and somebody else is also shipping-if the Government ships $50,000,000 worth, to the extent that that would mean an amount paid out of $50,000,000 a certain portion of the public pay the expenditure of $50,000,000—then, if the Government gets its freight carried for nothing, the other public-not all of the people, but mainly the ones who have to pay for shipping-will pay the difference. That differentiates it entirely.

Mr. SPOONER. But everyone has the benefit of the Government, whether he patronizes the railroad company or whether he does not. The Government is the agency of all the people. I have always understood the theory upon which we abolished passes to be to deprive the railroad corporations of the country of the power to discriminate by means of free transportation ad libitum between shippers.

Mr. McCUMBER. That is one reason. Mr. SPOONER. And the principal reason. It was to destroy discrimination. If the Senator and myself lived and carried on the same kind of business in the same community, if you please, it was to prohibit the railway company from any longer giving rebates, from giving to the Senator and his family and their friends and his friends free transportation without limit, while they charged me, his competitor in the same community, shipping over the same line, and selling in the same market, full prices for transportation for myself and all of mine. That is a very subtle instrumentality, which has always been employed by transportation companies to attract business, to draw a shipper from one railroad to another, and to discriminate against one man in a community in favor of another. It never entered my mind that the Government of the United States, in the transaction of public business for which the people pay every dollar of expense, was to be regarded as a shipper, as the individuals of the country, the business men of the country, are shippers. I beg the Senator's pardon for interrupting him so long.

Mr. McCUMBER. I want to see where the Senator's argument is going to land the Senator and the country. It is going to land us in paternalism, if it is carried out to its logical sequence. Let us see. The propositon is that the people are always interested in the Government saving wherever it can on expenses, because the people have got to pay those expenses. I maintain, upon the other hand, that that is not the proper solution of the differences between the Government and the governed. For instance, I maintain that business of every character, although it could be carried on more cheaply by the Government and although the people have to pay more because it is not carried on by the Government, should still be carried on by the people. Let us take a case in point. I have no doubt but what the Government could erect the proper buildings and machinery and go into the business of manufacturing everything that is necessary to build its war vessels, and that it could build them more cheaply than it can hire the shipping interests to build them; but I should never be in favor of its doing so, unless the shipping interests had it by the throat, so that there would be no competition whatever. I believe that we should pay more and have the work done by private shipping interests. Otherwise we would be thrown competition with the shipbuilding interests, and the Government has no right to enter into competition with the shipbuilding interests. In this case it would enter into competition with the merchants and other people who are paying for the transportation of freight. The Government has no right to enter into competition against any of its own people.

So it might manufacture its powder more cheaply than the private manufacturers can manufacture it, and the Government would gain by it; but I insist that the Government has no right to go into the manufacture of powder. It could perform a great many other things that are done by private interests much more cheaply, because there would be no profit to be earned, no people to be supported by reason of the profits; but I certainly am against the Government going into any character of private business. It may get its business done as cheaply as it can in honest competition with private business; but it never ought to ask the railroads or the shipbuilders or anyone else to give it preferences.

Suppose it wants to build a war vessel costing $10,000,000 and it should go to one of the great shipbuilding concerns and "I want this ship built for $5,000,000. The public gets the benefit of it. We will tax the public for the other five millions. In other words, you build it for less than it costs you and let the public pay the difference." That is a case that is exactly parallel with the case of the Government asking the railroads to furnish transportation for half of what it costs and making the public pay the difference. Neither of them is a correct principle of government.

Mr. President, there are other things in this bill to which

I will not now advert. As I say, we tried in the railroad rate bill to get a square deal for all and special privileges for none.

Mr. WARREN. Will the Senator allow me right there?

Mr. McCUMBER. Yes.

Mr. WARREN. When the Senator expresses the sentiment that we provided absolutely the same rates for everybody without exception he forgets that railroad men and their families go free; he forgets that the Government, through its Post-Office Department, is able to transport its employees free, but when it comes to the War Department, and it is necessary to send officers and men and property over the railroads, the Senator would debar it from sending them free or at reduced rates. It seems to me the Senator is pushing the matter too far.

Mr. McCUMBER. The Government is conducting the Post-Whether it That is a part of its governmental duty. done under private control, I do not know.

Mr. WARREN. It is conducting it precisely the same as the War Department is conducting its business.

Mr. McCUMBER. The Senator will bear in mind that the Government does not ask the railread companies to carry the mail for half the price they charge private individuals for carrying the same thing. I believe we pay fully as much as the private individual pays for a like kind of service. The Government pays all along for everything.

Mr. WARREN. The Senator is wrong about that. The Congress of the United States provides what shall be paid for carrying the mails, and also that certain postal employees shall be carried free of charge.

Mr. McCUMBER. I did not say that Congress did not so provide.

Mr. WARREN. Of course there are no others engaged in the United States in the same business, but almost from time immemorial the Government, in the matter of the mails, has contracted for their transportation at such rate as it saw fit, whether that rate exceeded or whether it was one-half what the rate might be for other merchandise.

Another thing: The Government, in the telegraph business, forces upon the companies a cut rate for Government business, and we do not contend against it.

Mr. McCUMBER. I do.

Mr. WARREN. It seems to me the logic of the Senator's argument is that we shall take the profit of transporting the families of these officers, who can hardly support themselves and their families even when not compelled to take these enforced trips, and distribute it among those who are shipping freight over the road in the shape of lower freight rates. words, we must, in a way, insist upon contributions from them; we must compel the railroads to charge them full rates, although the railroads are willing to give them half rates, so that the shippers of freight may get that amount of money, wrung from the slender means of the officers of the Army, who, as General Funston says, are getting less than bricklayers, plumbers, carpenters, and others in San Francisco.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, my heart bleeds equally with that of the Senator as I see the poor military man go down with his wife and his family in his carriage to the depot. I see the footman alight to help them out, my heart bleeds for them to think that they must pay just the same prices as other citizens; that they must pay just the same as the poor fellow of the sod shanty in my own State, who is attempting to make a living. My heart is as sympathetic for them as is that of the Senator from Wyoming. But while I am giving this aristocracy that we are building up in this country my heartfelt sympathy, I do not feel that the fellow out in the sod shanty should pay the difference; and, if he should happen to want to come East should be compelled to make up the difference between the half rate and the full rate for the benefit of these downtrodden people.

Now, Mr. President, I believe that we spent too much time in trying to get a perfect rate bill last year to attempt now to make an insidious attack upon it by getting special privileges for any class. We have already got amendments in here to include the Coast and Geodetic Survey, and then I know of no reason why we should not include the Geological Survey. I do not know where we are going to stop if we make any exception

When we excepted the railroad employees we excepted them because we felt if they took their families they were taking them with them in their work, not for the purpose of traveling generally over the country, but to allow their families to accompany them if they saw fit. That was going a little further than strict justice required, I think.

Mr. WARREN. And we seek to do the same when an officer of the Army is ordered from here to the Philippines and is compelled to take his family with him or suffer a separation of two or three years, maintaining the expense of two homes, one for his family here and one for himself in that part of the world to which he is sent by the imperative orders of the War Department.

Mr. McCUMBER. Why not do the same when an officer of the civil service is going from one portion of the country to another? There is no more reason why we should include one another? There is officer than another.

We have provided for them. Mr. SPOONER. We have provided for them. Mr. WARREN. We have provided for other Government employees

Mr. McCUMBER. Yes; in a certain way, I think; but to that extent it is wrong.

Now, I want to call attention to another feature—
Mr. HOPKINS. Will the Senator allow me to interrupt him?
The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Illinois?

Mr. McCUMBER. Yes.

Mr. HOPKINS. In relation to civil officers of the Government, is it not a fact that the Government pays all the expenses of post-office inspectors and other inspectors, as, for instance, in the Secret Service? They are all civil officers.

While they are on duty.

Mr. McCUMBER. So it does for Army officers. It pays all their expenses when they are on duty. But the Government does not pay for the transportation of the families of civil officers, and it ought not to pay for the transportation of the families of military officers.

So much has been said, Mr. President, about this poor class, that I really think it is time we should understand a little about the care that is given by the Government to the military and naval arm of the nation. They receive emoluments and benefits that are not accorded to any other class, so far as I know. They have higher pay. If I write and ask what is the salary of the Lieutenant-General, they will write back and tell me it is $11,000 a year; but, if I make an investigation, I ascertain that the Lieutenant-General has served for fifteen years, and then I discover that he gets 30 per cent more than $11,000.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I am sure the Senator does not want to be regarded as making that statement. was and it is not now the law. The Senator ought to know it, and the Senate itself must know it at this point.

Mr. McCUMBER. To which class of officers does the length of service provision apply?

Mr. WARREN. It does not strictly apply to any officers but lieutenants and captains, because there is a maximum as to the majors, lieutenant-colonels, colonels, brigadiers, major-generals, and the Lieutenant-General.

Mr. McCUMBER. Here I have the list of major-generals. There are eight of them in active service and their regular salary is $7,500.

Mr. WARREN. That is right.

Mr. McCUMBER. That is the initiatory salary. Do they at any time receive more than that?

Mr. WARREN. That is the maximum salary that they can ever receive

Mr. McCUMBER. There is $7,500 for that. What are all of these provisions on page after page of the bill for length-of-service pay—a new appropriation for length of service?

Mr. WARREN. What is the question?

Mr. McCUMBER. I am asking the Senator to explain what is meant in this bill by the additional appropriation almost under every heading for length-of-service pay?

Mr. WARREN. It applies under every heading where pay is rated for lieutenants, captains, majors, colonels, and lieutenantcolonels, because the minimum that a colonel can get and the maximum are different, although not to the extent of the 40 per cent that may apply to a captain or a lieutenant. A lieutenant gets $1,400 unmounted and $1,500 mounted. After five years he gets an additional 10 per cent; after ten years, 20 per cent; after fifteen years, 30 per cent, and after twenty years 40 per cent, and that is his maximum. The same is true of captains. A captain receives $1,800 unmounted and $2,000 mounted; a major, $2,500; a lieutenant-colonel, $3,000, and a colonel receives $3,500. The maximum salary of a colonel is $4,500; the maximum of a lieutenant-colonel is $4,000, and the maximum of a major is $3,500; so that the extra pay applies only up to that maximum.

Mr. McCUMBER. The Senator gives that as the maximum. What is the amount of their retired pay? Is it three-fourths? Mr. WARREN. It is three-fourths of whatever salary the officer receives at the time of retirement, according to the rank he had attained when retired.

Mr. McCUMBER. I will take the Lieutenant-General. The Lieutenant-General is rated at $11,000. I find that on the retired list the average annual salary is $8,250. I find the majorgenerals receive $7,500 each.

Mr. SCOTT. May I interrupt the Senator from North Da-

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from West Virginia?

Mr. McCUMBER. Certainly.

Mr. SCOTT. The Senator speaks of the Lieutenant-General. He will find that this bill dispenses with that rank entirely. So he need not discuss that at all.

Mr. McCUMBER. We have not dispensed with the rank of those who have been retired. They are still receiving the same. The major-generals receive an annual salary of $7,500. They retire at $5,625.

Mr. WARREN. Not $7,500 on the retired list. Threequarters of that

Mr. McCUMBER. No; I mean on active service. I am giving the active and the retired pay. These are given under the annual average salary of officers of each grade; and if the major-generals receive $7,500—and I understand the Senator to say that is the highest—then why is it placed under the head of average.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President-

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. McCUMBER. Certainly. Mr. NELSON. I desire to call the attention of the Senator from North Dakota to the fact that these officers, where they are not residing in Government quarters, are entitled to an allowance for quarters. So the Government practically furnishes them a residence in addition to the salary.

Mr. McCUMBER. Yes; but that is not mentioned in connection with the salary. I want to call attention to that. When an officer is on duty at the barracks he does not have to pay rent. We generally give them pretty good buildings to live in. Such quarters as he uses where he may be stationed would cost him from $1,800 to $2,000 per year in the city of Washington. He gets that free. If he, however, goes to the city of Washington and performs his duty there, he is given a certain allowance for his rooms, which probably is equivalent to from $1,500 to $2,000 a year.

Mr. SCOTT. I will ask the Senator if he knows what the allowance is. What are the officers allowed for each room? If the Senator will figure it up, he will find that it does not amount to anything like the sum he stated.

Mr. McCUMBER. If he gets ten rooms, and if he is allowed $15 for each room, it would be a hundred and fifty dollars a month. There are those who can give better information than I can.

Mr. WARREN. I hope the Senator will confine himself a little more closely to the facts. I know he wants to do it. The allowance of rooms commences at two for a lieutenant and extends along up possibly to ten for a Lieutenant-General.

Mr. McCUMBER. Ten, at how much a room?

Mr. WARREN. The maximum allowance is $12 a month per room.

Mr. McCUMBER. For how many rooms? Mr. SCOTT. Say, for a first lieutenant. Mr. WARREN. For a first lieutenant, two

For a first lieutenant, two rooms; a captain, three rooms—$24 to $36 a month.

Mr. SCOTT. That is far distant from $1,800 or $2,000.

Mr. WARREN. It does not apply in any case except to officers detailed away from their permanent quarters.

Mr. McCUMBER. I stated that the quarters furnished an officer of the higher grade at the place where his duties are to be performed ordinarily would be equivalent, in rent, in the city of Washington, to from $1,500 to $2,000.

The Senator is entirely wide of the mark Mr. WARREN. about that. He is running wild in his statements.
Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President—

Mr. WARREN. Will the Senator permit me to say a word?

Mr. McCUMBER. Certainly. Mr. WARREN. The Senator is giving the salaries of the few higher officers of the Army. What kind of a display would it make if some Senator, to illustrate life-insurance salaries, were to get up here and state the incomes of the life-insurance presidents, the salaries of the general officers of the great railroad corporations, omitting all those of the lower rank—the agents, the bookkeepers, etc.—and taking the few higher ones? What would such a comparison amount to?

Now, a man in order to be taken in the Army must be a selected man. Boys applying for entrance to West Point must have a physique that will pass a rigid inspection. They must have a mental equipment that is excellent; and, as a matter of fact, only about one in three is accepted. Not more than half of those at first accepted pass West Point. There are many officers who have left West Point and gone out and received salaries of twenty or thirty thousand dollars, and I know as high, in one instance, as $40,000. They are men who have been in the Army. The Army to-day includes just as good men as you can find in the life insurance companies, just as good men as you can find in the great railroad corporations. When you come to the high-salaried officers, there is one Lieutenant-General until the present officer's term expires and then none; you have seven or eight major-generals and fifteen brigadiergenerals in the line, and possibly nine more in the departments, as heads of departments, a matter of twenty-five or thirty high salaries in the entire Army, and they go to men who have charge of this great property and men who have charge of the distribution of these great amounts that we appropriate, and have devoted their lives to Army work and service. I say it is unfair to undertake to hold up here to ridicule the comparatively few officers of the Army who get high salaries as illustrating the general pay of Army officers—

Mr. McCUMBER. I will not allow the Senator's statement to go unchallenged that anyone has ridiculed anything. want to say to the Senator that I have my views on what is just and proper, and I will express those views to the best of my ability, and I will not submit to the statement that there is any spirit of ridicule in any statement that has been made is any spirit of ridicale in any statement that has been made in the discussion of this matter.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President—

Mr. McCUMBER. I yielded for a question and the Senator made an argument. I will take up the argument with him.

made an argument. I will take up the argument with him.

Mr. WARREN. Will the Senator yield until I apologize?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Wyoming?

Mr. McCUMBER. I yield to the Senator for whatever purpose he wishes

Mr. WARREN. I had no right, perhaps, to make a speech and for that I apologize. If I have wrongfully accused the Senator of ridiculing, I apologize most humbly for that also. But when he stated that the officers of the Army drove to the depot with footmen and drivers-men getting $1,400 a year-it seemed to me as if it were ridicule. I take it back, however, and will assume it was not ridicule, if the Senator will say that he spoke fairly and in good faith about carriages, footmen, drivers, etc.

Mr. McCUMBER. When the Senator, in most sweeping terms, spoke of the poverty of these officers, I thought it was but proper to give the opposite side. That is as far as I have

Mr. WARREN. You do not think that officers are usually driven in carriages, accompanied by footmen and drivers, do you?

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I was considering these salaries for the purpose of determining whether it is the duty of Congress to make an exception for the families of officers different from all the rest of American citizenship. If there is such a case made as to justify us in making a different law for the traveling officer and the traveling public, then we ought to understand upon what basis such a proposition is

Mr. SCOTT. Will the Senator allow me?

Mr. McCUMBER. I wish to finish, and then I will yield.

Mr. SCOTT. An ordinary citizen does not have to move un-less he so wills it. But an officer at the command of the Secretary of War is compelled to move. He may be compelled to move from the Pacific coast to the Atlantic, and it may cost him seven or eight hundred dollars to make the move.

Mr. McCUMBER. When he goes upon his official duties the Government pays the traveling expenses

Individually, but not for his family. Mr. SCOTT. Mr. McCUMBER. The Government pays for it. Mr. SCOTT. Not for his family.

Mr. McCUMBER. Certainly not. When the Senator goes away on official business, if he takes his family with him, the Government does not pay for his family either.

I take these salaries just as they are given me from the War Department, and I say that when you take the benefits that these officers are receiving, as a whole, they are better paid than are the civil officers of the Government, because they have privileges that are not accorded to civil officers, for the most part. I do not know exactly what is the value of four or five rooms. It would depend upon what building they were in. If they were at one of the hotels, at $5 a day each, it would be considerable. I do not know what allowance is made. Undoubtedly a greater allowance is made for the higher officers than for the lower ones. I am not complaining that the allowances are unjust. I simply say that, for the most part, they must be taken into consideration in discussing the question of the salary for the purpose of determining whether we ought to change this law which we made last winter.

Now, that is not all. Every officer not only for himself, but for his family, as I understand, and the Senator in charge of the bill can correct me if I am in error, has the privilege of purchasing all of his goods from the Commissary Department. That means considerable. He purchases practically at wholesale rates. What I mean by wholesale rates is the original cost of the goods and 10 per cent added, if I am correctly informed, and 10 per cent would cover in most cases the freight from the point of purchase to the place of sale. The difference between the wholesale price and the retail price with the ordinary family of five would probably amount to at least $500 a year. It might amount to considerably more. Officers have the benefit of that as well. I can not say what it amounts to.

Mr. WARREN. I think if the Senator will consider that it is the difference between the two profits—that of the retailer and that of the wholesaler-and that if the family is small, he will admit that $500 is too much.

As I keep house, I understand something Mr. McCUMBER. about it. I am keeping house and know something about it. live in the city of Washington, and the difference between the wholesale price and the retail price is very, very great—perhaps three or four times as great as it is in my own section of the country.

Mr. WARREN. What would the Senator estimate the percentage of difference to be between wholesale and retail? That is a good way to get at it.

Mr. McCUMBER. In the neighborhood of 50 per cent.

Mr. WARREN. Oh! On sugar, for instance.

Mr. McCUMBER. That is between wholesale and what it is sold for at retail. I mean the ordinary goods. It runs all the way from 25 per cent on groceries and little things of that kind to from 40 to 50 per cent on meats. In some branches of the grocery line the difference between wholesale and retail is very light indeed. But we must take this as a general rule.

I notice that we are still increasing salaries in this bill; that giving that which is equivalent to an additional salary. Here is a provision on page 27:

Provided, That hereafter the heat and light actually necessary for the authorized allowance of quarters for officers and enlisted men shall be furnished at the expense of the United States under such regula-tions as the Secretary of War may prescribe.

I call attention to it simply as an additional saving to the

Mr. WARREN. That is putting them back just where they were formerly and giving that which was taken away when salaries and allowances, etc., were reduced about the year 1870. It seemed to the committee that, in view of the increases in prices that have been made since the year 1870, it is not too much to restore what the officers originally had.

Mr. McCUMBER. But, Mr. President, the Senator must not consider me as ridiculing this at all or as criticising it. I simply call his attention to the matter to show that we are favoring these officers in many ways in this bill—assisting them

As to the lower officers, as I look over this bill, I agree with the Senator most emphatically that every one of the officers of the lower grades is receiving too little. There is no question about it. For my part I can not see any reason why we should have a difference of nearly $4,000 between major-general and the Lieutenant-General, or why there should be $2,000 between brigadler-general and major-general, or another thousand be-tween the next two grades. I think there is too wide a gap in all these instances between the several grades, and that there cught to be a leveling process, not necessarily by bringing the higher ones down, but by bringing the lower ones up. So we agree entirely upon that. I am in favor of granting a compensation that will be just and proper to every one of these officers.

I wish now to call the Senator's attention to another provision of this bill, to which I myself am opposed, and if I can raise a point against it, although it has already been adopted, I shall do so. I call the attention of the Senator to a provision of the bill on page 15, under the Bureau of Insular Affairs:

For officers of the Bureau of Insular Affairs, $9,000: Provided, That the Secretary of War is hereby authorized to detail an officer of the Army, whom he may consider especially well qualified, to act as principal assistant to the Chief of the Bureau of Insular Affairs of the War Department, and said principal assistant while acting under said detail shall have the rank, pay, and allowances of a major.

There is another method of raising the salary of at least one of them. The objection that I have to that is the delegating of Army officers to perform civil functions. If there is any one thing we should guard against, it is against reaching the military arm into all the civil branches of the Government. I do not believe that we should create so many officers that we do not know what to do with them. It is true that we probably have to-day twice as many officers as we need, and so to give employment and to help out in salaries we are continually attempting to crowd them into the civil business of the country. If it is necessary that we should have some one connected with the Bureau of Insular Affairs who is especially by education qualified in military affairs, there may be some reason which would justify the amendment.

Mr. WARREN. Will the Senator permit me right here?

Mr. McCUMBER. Certainly.

Mr. WARREN. The Senator is in error, at least from the standpoint of the Army and I think from the standpoint of the public generally, when he says we have too many officers. On the contrary, we are short of officers, and there have been so many details to military schools, for submarine mines, and tor-pedo purposes, etc., that the companies have but one and two instead of two or three commissioned officers each; and that is true throughout the Army.

The Insular Bureau is entirely within the War Department, and this amendment seeks to permit the employment, at the pay of a major, of an assistant to the chief. There is no doubt about the necessity of it. It is simply a matter of whether the Department shall be compelled to use a captain or a major. If a major is selected there will be no increase of salary. If a captain is selected there will be an increase the same as that given to officers at West Point and elsewhere for special duties.

Mr. McCUMBER. The increase may be absolutely proper. It may be appropriate. What I object to is projecting the arm of the Army into the civil affairs of the Government. That is What I object to is projecting the arm the custom in the old countries, until we find officers connected with every branch of the civil Government. I do not want to see it grow in this country.

I call the attention of the Senator and of the Senate to another matter that pertains to the salaries, and I speak of it as pertaining to the salaries only as bearing upon this proposition, and that is the salary of retired officers. A retired officer receives a salary equivalent to three-fourths of his active salary. If he had to pay a life insurance company for the purpose of securing an annual income of this amount, how much would he have to pay? Have we ever thought of that proposition?

Mr. President, that privilege alone is worth millions upon millions of dollars to the Army. That privilege alone, the right to retire at a certain age and be protected for the balance of his life, is equivalent to an enormous sum paid to a life insurance company for the same purpose. I believe it would average an increase of salary equivalent to 50 per cent to provide that much of an income after a certain age, or very nearly that; perhaps more than 50 per cent in the case of those of the lower grades Those things it seems to me should be taken into consideration.

Mr. WARREN. Will the Senator allow me right here? Mr. McCUMBER. Certainly. Mr. WARREN.

Mr. WARREN. Of course that is no new thing. That has been the practice almost ever since the formation of an army. It applies to the Army and the Navy and the enlisted force.

Mr. McCUMBER. I know it is not a new thing, but it is a thing we ought to take into consideration.

I wish to say to the Senator right here that the greatest privilege which can be accorded to any young man in the United States is that of being educated by the Government of the United States in the very best educational institute for boyhood, and to be then assured a commission in the Army, and to be then assured a life income after he has gone out of the Army. I can not imagine any greater boon to any young man than that of having the privilege of entering the Army or the Navy of the United States. It can be granted to but few of the American citizens. But what I want the man who has entered one of these great seats of learning to feel is that when he has stepped over the threshold his blood does not change from red to blue, that he is still a good American citizen, receiving this great blessing, receiving this privilege from the American people, and that he should not be accorded special privileges and rights that are not accorded to the one who had to be left out and was unable to secure the same privileges.

The Senator speaks very highly of the class of young men who enter the Army. Mr. President, I will agree with the Senator that they are among the best young boys that we have in the country, but I desire to call the Senator's attention to another thing: We select these young men when they are from 15 and 16 to 18 years of age. We do not know what is in a man until he has shown his mettle in the struggle for existence against other men. You can not measure the quality and the character of an individual between the ages of 15 and 20 years, and I would generally select, for practical knowledge and not mere theory, for any character of labor, not the man who has been educated in this way, but the man who has been educated in the hard school of struggle and experience. He is worth more from a practical standpoint than any officer you can select for that purpose, and I would select him for every civil duty and not select an officer of the Army for it.

Mr. President, I desire to say that everything I have uttered upon this subject has been simply to enforce my plea that we shall treat American citizens exactly alike and that no one shall have a special privilege, and I ground my point of order upon

Mr. WARREN. I assume that the point of order will not be pressed until there has been an opportunity to reply.

Mr. McCUMBER. Certainly not.

Mr. WARREN. I should like to ask the Senator before he sits down if he thinks it is quite fair to an enlisted man who may have a family and who certainly does not get a large salary, when a railroad is willing to carry his wife and children free or at reduced rates, to deny him the privilege of having that done?

The soldier may have served his time faithfully and well in the Philippines. He is entitled upon expiration of his term to go to the place of his original enlistment, but instead of that he does what the Government is anxious to have him do, if he is a good soldier—reenlists. He reenlists in the Philippines. When the time comes for his next discharge, he is entitled to a discharge in the Philippines. He may want to go to his home, say, in New Jersey or Massachusetts or somewhere on the Atlantic coast.

It has been customary for the transcontinental roads and others to give him a very low rate, including his family, if he has one. Does not the Senator think that we ought in some way to relieve a situation like that?

Mr. McCUMBER. Yes, Mr. President.

Mr. WARREN. We laid this hardship upon him by the law under discussion, the interstate-commerce law.

Mr. McCUMBER. But why should we assume this method Why should we do indirectly that which of relieving him? every impulse of duty declares we ought to do directly? No American citizen should be asked to serve his Government for the sum of $13 a month. Pay the soldier what he ought to have. Pay him honest compensation. Then let him do with his money as he sees fit. Pay him what is proper. I believe our soldiers ought to receive more than double what they are receiving today, and then they could afford to pay their railroad fare.

Mr. SPOONER. Mr. President, this provision, as it has finally been worked out without the amendment which is proposed to it, seems to me rather a ridiculous one. It says:

That nothing in the act-

Which is mentioned-

shall be held to prohibit the allowance of reduced rates to the Government for the transportation of persons or property, or to prohibit the transportation of officers and enlisted men of the Army, Navy, Revenue-Cutter Service, and the members of the Coast and Geodetic Survey, in the service of the United States, and their families at reduced rates.

I can see no reason in the world why the members of the Coast and Geodetic Survey and their families should be preferred in the matter of reduced transportation to other civil employees of the Government. They certainly are no more important than the Cabinet officers and the thousands of officials who are constantly in the civil employment of the Government. As it stands it is illogical and, to my mind, absolutely absurd.

Mr. President, coming for a moment-and I will take but moment-to the remark of my friend the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. McCumber], whose ability I grant and whose friendship I am proud to have, that the suggestion which I made led to centralization of government, I beg to say that I can see no possible theory upon which that can be deduced from any observation which I made. The Government does not enter into competition with the individual citizen. If the Government chooses to manufacture its own powder, which in the last analysis in the interest of all the people it must have the power to do, it does not enter into competition with the manufacturers of ammunition throughout the country, because it manufactures only for its own use and not for sale, not for profit, whereas the citizen who manufactures it manufactures for sale as a part of his business and for profit.

Mr. McCUMBER. Do we not limit the market of the citizen then to that extent?

Mr. SPOONER. Oh, that is almost socialistic. But that argument, Mr. President, would prevent the Government of the United States, if the powder factories of the country should be destroyed or if some great combination should take the Government by the throat when war is imminent, from manufacturing its own powder in order to protect our coasts and to defend our flag. That can not be possible, and any argument based upon it can not be a sound argument.

It costs the Government, I think, more—and always has and, I presume, always will—to manufacture or to carry on works than it would cost to have it done by contract, or than it costs, combinations being omitted, by purchase from individuals. But there is nothing I have said—for I am as much opposed to centralization as any man in this Chamber or who will ever enter this Chamber—that warrants a suggestion that it favors inferentially or any other way centralization.

Now, Mr. President, a word about the Army officer. The Senator from North Dakota has gone very carefully through the details as to the allowances to Army officers. So much is allowed for quarters. I lived once in some of their quarters. I would not want to do so again. Hundreds of these Army officers have spent almost all their life on the frontier, in tents and cabins, and on the plains, through the winters where the quarters were by no means comfortable. I spent a winter a good many years ago in a fort not far from where the Senator lives. I was an officer. I had company quarters. They were almost intolerable, and they were as good as there were to be had in that region.

Mr. McCUMBER. The Senator will find very excellent quarters there now

Mr. SPOONER. Possibly better than in the Philippines, better than an Army officer may find anywhere to which the Commander in Chief orders him to go and fixes his destination.

There is one phase of the Army officer's life which the Senator from North Dakota leaves out of account. The West Pointer, of course, gets his education at West Point. It is an admirable education. It is an education, however, more intended to fit him for Army service than it is for business life. The young man who graduates from West Point graduates from that institution with an honorable obligation resting upon him to serve as an Army officer the Government which has educated him to be an Army officer; and, Mr. President, some of the years of his life, while in active service, he may have pleasant assignments. He may live for a time in Washington. He may ride in an Army ambulance with a driver to the depot.

But every day and night of his life, until he shall have retired, he is resting under a solemn obligation at the word of command to move; it may be to the Philippines; it may be to Cuba; it may be to the frontier, if there be any frontier left. He is sworn to stand under the flag and be shot if need be. It is a part of his contract to serve the Government. He does not always have good quarters. It is not the contract of his service that he shall be pampered. He may not always have his family with him; but he marches under the burning sun, and he marches through the jungle, and he marches through the pouring rain, and he sleeps not in a soft bed, but sometimes in the swamp, sometimes in the rain, often, often on the ground. Some phases of his life are pleasant, but there is the uncertainty of his life, the fact that he is always subject to the command of another as to his movements. Whether he shall go into danger or sleep in comfort on a canopied bed is not for him to say. He parted with his choice long, long ago. He is a machine. He can have no permanent home. He can not be sure for a month that he may not be obliged to part from those he loves, and part from them for a year, aye, Mr. President, forever.

This contract of the soldier, this never-ceasing obligation to go where he is ordered, to face death in one form or another, to leave his family, perhaps never to see them again, is something that with any right-thinking man counts for more than commutation of quarters, or the right to buy at wholesale goods purchased by the Government for distribution among officers.

Are the officers of the Army to be called blue blooded? means aristocratic. They are a class. They do not make of themselves a class. They are segregated. The man who enters it segregates himself by his oath and his loss of liberty, of the freedom to go where he will and to do what he will. Of course he is of a class. But, Mr. President, when the bullet of the enemy strikes the officer's body or that of the soldier as he fights and falls under the flag, the blood which gushes from it is not blue blood, it is the best of loyal and patriotic and selfsacrificing red blood.

It is not quite fair, Mr. President, to make a standard of the allowances and the salary of the Lieutenant-General; they are very, very few relatively; or the major-general, or the brigadier-general, or the colonel. The Army is filled with men who have been there many, many years, who have been traveling along the weary road from the second lieutenancy to the rank of major, to the rank of lieutenant-colonel, aye, to the rank of captain.

The Senator from Wyoming tells me that there are to-day in the Army captains over 50 years of age. Beginning at West Point and serving on the frontier, having no soft and beautiful assignments or details, it is a long journey from West Point to 50 years of age and the epaulette of a captain.

I have not known many officers who have accumulated much. Now and then, I suppose, Army officers have been able to take advantage in a legitimate way of opportunities outside of the service to make money; but I venture to say that the great mass of the Army officers have relied upon their pay and what little they could save from their pay.

There is another thing about it. The Army officer with a wife and children, daughters and sons, loves civilians do their wives and their children. He is as anxious that the daughter should have the accomplishments and the education which fit her to be the daughter of an officer and an accomplished woman as anyone in the world can be. You can not get that traveling all over the world. I have known many of these officers who have denied themselves and sacrificed much with their wives, that they might send their daughters to satisfactory schools and academies in the States while they were serving on the frontier and protecting the border and the settlers of the West from the ravages of Indian tribes.

We have to average this thing, Mr. President; not to pick out the most favored and make them the standard for all, because that is not the standard of all, nor is it the standard of

It does not change the rate law. I think if we could have proceeded to the enactment of the rate legislation in the usual Senatorial way, with less of friction, more of conference and discussion, such as is usual when the Senate acts within itself, perhaps some provisions of the rate law which are to-day found to be objectionable, and others the objections to which have not yet been discovered, would not be found to exist in it. But if there is anything in the rate law, so far as Army officers are concerned, which is not just, it ought to be eliminated, and this is a good place to eliminate it.

Take the enlisted men. Does the same principle, so far as logic is concerned, not apply to them? They have, in a way, allowances, too. They are ill paid, I think, although their pay has not been changed for many years, as I recollect it.

Mr. WARREN. They are allowed food and clothing, which, of course, the officers are not.

Mr. SPOONER. Yes; they are allowed food and clothing, and they are allowed shelter except when they have no shelter, bunks except when they sleep on the ground under the stars or under the clouds

Mr. WARREN. They are allowed all the real necessities of

Mr. SPOONER. The Senator says they are allowed all the real necessities of life. Now, I do not believe that an Army officer, certainly not an enlisted man, can, without special provision, transport his family with him to a foreign post. It is a very grievous burden upon the average officer, if he must pay for it at full rates, to take with him his wife and perhaps his children to a post far away, a service or tour of duty which perhaps may take him a year or more. How many Senators would be willing to leave the wife and the family and enter upon a service which would preclude them from association with the family for a year, perhaps more? The officer is a better officer if he can have thrown around him the sacred and sweet influences of home, of wife and children, and the enlisted man is a better soldier; he is less liable to temptation; he is more stable in his service of the Government. I do not myself begrudge them, and I think the people of the United States who have been well served always by the Army on the frontier and everywhere

Mr. WARREN. At San Francisco. Mr. SPOONER. Yes; at San Fran Yes; at San Francisco and everywhere, as they have been by the Navy, will begrudge the opportunity to these men, officers and enlisted men of the Army and the where it is proper and consistent with a due discharge of military duty, to facilitate the transportation of their families, so that, as far as possible, they may live together. It does not compete; it does not injure any person in the United States appreciably. I have no idea that among $5,000,000 people the trifling sum which would be taken out of the aggregate of railway transportation for the transportation of our little Army, the officers, and their families would amount to a discoverable sum; nor do I think that the principle is bad.

I go back to the proposition with which I started a while ago, that this is the people's Government. The Army is the people's Army. The officers are the agents of the people for purposes of defense and protection. Government is only an agency in this country and under our system through which the people govern themselves; that is all. These men are their agents. Every reasonable allowance and concession should be made to them; and the Army, more than almost any other class I know, should have the concessions which are proposed in this bill.

We provided in the rate bill that the railway companies might give free transportation to the ex soldiers and sailors of the war of the rebellion. That costs the people something, on the argument of my good friend from North Dakota [Mr. McCumberl. Why is that done? That is done out of gratitude-not the payment of a debt, but out of gratitude by the people of the United States to the men who in the long ago preserved the Republic and made it the Government which it is and which it will always be, "an indestructible Union of indestructible States.'

The day may come-I hope it will not, for I hope war will not come to us again, but no man on this earth can tell-when we may be grateful to the present Army and those who are to swell their ranks. But if it is proper for us out of gratitude to concede this thing to the members of the old Army, why is it not the decent thing to concede it to the members of the existing Army, who may be called to China, as they were not long ago, who may be called to the Philippines, or called to God only knows where they may not be called under the contract they assume to obey, and to face death and danger anywhere the orders of the commanding officer may direct them to go.

Mr. ALDRICH. Mr. President, the difficulties which surround this amendment, as they present themselves to my mind, are entirely disconnected from any question as to the adequacy of the pay either of the enlisted men or the officers of the Army of the United States, or any question connected with the character of their services. No Senator can have a higher opinion of the soldiers of the United States Army than I have. But this is entirely a practical question which we are dealing with as the representatives of the Government of the United States in connection with the transportation of merchandise and soldiers for its benefit.

As I understand the Senator from Wyoming, in charge of this bill, the proposition involves the practical reduction of rates of transportation 50 per cent on all soldiers and all goods transported for the United States connected with the Army-that is, on certain roads.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President-

• The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Rhode Island yield to the Senator from Wyoming?

Mr. ALDRICH. Certainly.

Mr. WARREN. In explanation of that: From later information I am not certain but the Interstate Commerce Commission might yet decide that the rates as to merchandise might be as The complication arises in this way: Originally various roads, fifty or

Mr. ALDRICH. I would much prefer that the Senator would simply state whether in a general way my suggestion is correct—that the statement made by the Senator the other day was that certain roads transported soldiers and material for the Army at 50 per cent of their published rates, and that it is proposed to equalize that by having other roads give the same rates

Mr. WARREN. It is proposed by this measure to give them the privilege of equalizing it.

Mr. ALDRICH. Yes; of carrying at one-half.
Mr. WARREN. I will later on explain it. I do not wish to interrupt the Senator now.

Mr. ALDRICH. I suppose when the words "reduced rates' are used in the bill that means reduced below their published tariffs, the rates which they give to everybody in the United States, and which are published for the information of all shippers without regard to whom they are.

In our recent legislation we provided that these tariffs should be made over every conceivable road in the United States; and that they should be published and adhered to. We made it an offense punishable by a fine and imprisonment to depart from those rates, or for any person to give or to accept a rebate from those rates, or lot any person to give of to accept a redact right those rates, and I believe that under that act or the previous act, known as the "Elkins Act," punishment has been meted out to offenders, even offenders who were working under a contract. Now, what is this proposition? It is that the Government of the United States, through Congress, is to ask the railroads of the United States to carry their merchandise and their material at one-half of the published rates.

Mr. BACON. Will the Senator permit me a moment?

Mr. ALDRICH. Certainly.

Mr. BACON. I understand the suggestion to be that there are certain roads which, under the law, are now compelled to carry for 50 per cent-at half rates.

Mr. ALDRICH. Under contracts which were made some time

Mr. BACON. Yes; I understand that, if the Senator will

Mr. ALDRICH. And other contracts were made void by the passage of the act of last year or of two years ago.

Mr. BACON. If the Senator will pardon me a moment, I have not completed the statement I desired to make. I am informed by the junior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. Clarke] that there is one road running through Arkansas, a land-grant road, which is compelled to haul the troops and munitions of the United States free.

Mr. WARREN. There are several in the United States. Mr. BACON. The question I wanted to ask was, if we are going to modify the rate law for the purpose of meeting the conditions spoken of by the Senator from Wyoming, that they shall haul at half rates, what are we going to do as to this other class? Are we going to modify the law so as to make provision for the entire free transportation of all troops and munitions of war? If we are to have equality, we shall have

Mr. ALDRICH. I was myself coming to that point. Mr. BACON. I beg the Senator's pardon.

Mr. ALDRICH. I was aware of the fact that there were certain railroads which were required by their charters to carry munitions of war and soldiers free of any transportation charge. Now, as the Senator from Georgia [Mr. Bacon] very well suggests, we could save I do not know how many million dollars-the Senator from Iowa [Mr. Allison] knows much better than I-but we could save certainly a number of millions of dollars, looking at it purely from that standpoint, if we provided that all the railroads in the United States should transport all of the materials of war and all of our soldiers free of cost.

Mr. WARREN. These railroads had previously obtained value received in bonds and in loans of credit; and for that reason, and in consideration of those benefits, they are handling this transportation for 50 cents on the dollar. Some other railroads, anxious that the Government-aided railroads should receive no greater benefits than they, desire to share in this business.

Mr. ALDRICH. I suppose the Senator from Wyoming is as well aware as I am that at the time we passed the so-called 'Elkins Act," in 1902 or 1903, there were in existence in the United States, to a considerable extent, contracts between the railroads and individuals for carrying freight at much less than the published rates, giving to large shippers advantages and rebates, which were not at that time unlawful, but which were made unlawful by the Elkins Act and by subsequent legislation.

Does the Senator from Wyoming think that those contracts ought to be recognized by law and held to be valid as against the declaration of public policy made by the act to which I have referred?

Mr. WARREN. If such contracts were made by shippers with the railroads and payments in full were made in advance for a long term of years, then I think such contracts ought to be respected.

Mr. ALDRICH. Does the Senator think the Government of the United States ought to put itself in the position of recogniz-ing a contract in violation of a principle of law which it itself enacted and which it enforces as against every other shipper in the United States?

Mr. WARREN. The Congress of the United States, having committed an error in the legislation heretofore enacted, would of course have a right to correct it by subsequent legislation.

Mr. ALDRICH. In my judgment this body can never commit an error of that kind, or it never ought to commit an error of that kind. I believe that the purpose of our legislation in regard to railroad rates was that every person should stand equal before the law with reference to rates of transportation for merchandise and for persons. That was the undoubted purpose of the legislation, and that which is now proposed has no place here; it can have no place here in the opinion of any man inside or outside of this Chamber, unless it is based upon that theory

Mr. FULTON. Mr. President-

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Rhode Island yield to the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. ALDRICH. I do. Mr. FULTON. I ask the Senator if he does not think there is a marked distinction between prohibiting preferential rates to an individual by a private individual or a corporation and prohibiting them to the Government? In other words, is not the law prohibiting preferential rates to one competitor against another in the interest of the whole people? It is to protect the entire people. Now, when you give the Government a preferential rate is it not in the interest of the entire community? This legislation is for the public, for the people; and what harm can result, what injury can result from giving the whole people the benefit of these preferential rates?

Mr. ALDRICH. Let us carry that out to its logical conclusion. Suppose we adopt the suggestion of the Senator from Georgia [Mr. Bacon] and provide that all transportation for the public service of all kinds shall be free.

Mr. BACON. Does the Senator understand that I suggested that that should be done?

Mr. ALDRICH. Yes; if we are going into the matter at all. Mr. BACON. I never said that.

Mr. ALDRICH. Let us see what is the effect of it.
Mr. BACON. I did not suggest that that should be done

Mr. ALDRICH. The Senator suggested the possibility of it.

Mr. BACON. Oh, yes.

Mr. ALDRICH. Let us see what the effect of it would be. It is true that the Government of the United States would save a certain amount of money, but who would get the benefit of it? It certainly would increase the cost of transportation to every other shipper in the United States and to every other passenger in the United States. Now, are those the same people who get the benefit of the original saving to the Government? You are taking money from one class of people and any means. putting it into the pockets of another class. You can not do that. That argument falls of its own weight. You can not undertake to carry it to its logical conclusion. The Senator shakes his head. He has been talking about the people of the United States as though they were one person and as if you took the money out of one pocket and put it into the other; as if it only affected one person. I say to the Senator that the people who pay the taxes in the United States, who support the Government of the United States by gratuities and revenues, are very rarely, and I may say never, the same people who are compelled to pay the additional cost of the transportation of merchandise and of passengers; and they never could pay in the same proportion. That is out of the question.

The suggestion which I am making is this: If the rule is a good one to make—and we have made it in the most rigid form why should we not adhere to it? We have said to the people of the United States we propose by this law that there shall be one fixed rate for every person in the United States, without reference to the amount of transportation or the circumstances which surround it; that every person shall stand, so far as the interstate commerce of the country is concerned, exactly in the same position, and now comes this proposition that the Government of the United States, having the power to do it, through Congress is to give to itself the advantages of a preferential rate 50 per cent below that charged to the public. I suggest that if the soldiers of the United States, either the enlisted men or the officers, are not paid sufficiently, it is the duty of Congress to raise their pay and increase their salaries, and if their families can not be properly moved from one part of the country to another on account of the inadequacy of their pay, we should make their pay sufficient. If it is proper that the Government of the United States should pay the cost of transportation for the families of the officers and soldiers, then let the United States pay it; but do not undertake to violate the principle or the terms of an act which has been passed in answer to a public demand that there should be equality before the law as to all people who use the interstate-commerce facilities of the country.

Mr. SPOONER. Mr. President-

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Rhode Island yield to the Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. ALDRICH. Certainly. Mr. SPOONER. This is not a gratuity afforded by the railway companies to the Government.

Mr. ALDRICH. Then, what is it?
Mr. SPOONER. It is not a gratuity. It is a contract for which the Government has paid hundreds of millions of dollars in land grants. Every land-grant charter provided that, in consideration of the land grant, of the aid given by the Government out of the public domain to the construction of a railroadferred upon a private corporation—they would carry munitions of war and troops of the United States at a price to be agreed

Mr. ALDRICH. The Senator was probably out of the Chamber when I made the suggestion in regard to private contracts which were violated and abrogated by the adoption of the various acts of 1902 and 1904.

Mr. SPOONER. Those were contracts which were held to be by legislation void and against public policy

Mr. ALDRICH. Precisely.
Mr. SPOONER. And they were discriminatory contracts; but these are contracts made by the Government many years ago, executed by the Government, and now the other party is performing the consideration it-agreed to perform, and why not?

Mr. ALDRICH. But I will say to the Senator that the suggestion is not that we should abrogate contracts which existed. not that we should require that the railroads should be required to carry goods and persons free, but that the Government should be charged the same rate as all others are charged. If every railroad in the United States having no contract and having no land grant-which is not bond aided-should be reduced to the

Mr. SPOONER. No. Mr. ALDRICH. That is the proposition here, as stated by the Senator.

Mr. SPOONER. No; not that they shall be reduced, but that they may if they will.

Mr. ALDRICH: That Congress shall exercise that moral suasion, which in this case would be absolutely controlling. That is the proposition.

Mr. SPOONER. No; but that these people may, if they choose, equalize themselves as to the cost of the transportation

Mr. ALDRICH. Equalize themselves how? By a distinct violation of the laws that we have enacted. By giving to us as a Government a transportation rate 50 per cent less than is charged anybody else? That is the equality which the Senator is trying to produce.

Mr. SPOONER. Now, if the Senator will permit me-Mr. ALDRICH. I will permit a question, of course.

Mr. SPOONER. It is not a proposition that anybody shall violate the law; but it is that the law shall be changed by the body which made it, so that the railway companies, which were not aided by the Government in the construction of their roads and which are bound to carry at a lower rate-simply as to the Army of the United States, munitions of war, troops, and all that-charge rates on the same basis as the bond-aided and land-aided companies, which are under contract with the Government. It is no proposition to violate the law; but it is a proposition to change it.

Mr. ALDRICH. I agree to the suggestion now made by the Senator from Wisconsin; but it is a proposition to violate the principle of the law, and a principle which will apply to every other person in the United States. It is to change the law so that the principle which we laid down as the basis of this legislation shall be entirely changed and reversed as to the relations between certain railroad companies and the Government of the United States

Mr. SPOONER.

Mr. ALDRICH. We having the power to do it and not having the power to do it as to other people.

Mr. SPOONER. This is not compulsory, Mr. ALDRICH. I understand that.

I understand that.

Mr. SPOONER. But, Mr. President, the Senator must admit that the Government of the United States, in the transaction of the public business, in the transportation of troops and munitions of war, is not from any standpoint on the same basis as the great industrial corporations of the country. The Government does none of its business for profit, while they all do business Is there no difference? for profit.

Mr. ALDRICH. I suppose the Senator would not contend that benevolent institutions who do not do business for profit, if they were loan or cooperative associations which made no profit, but simply distribute their products among themselves, would be entitled to different rates? Suppose the Government is a benevolent institution-

Mr. SPOONER. The Senator himself voted for a proposition in the rate bill that would permit the carriage free, or at largely reduced rates, of children in the care of benevolent associations.

Mr. ALDRICH. I voted for it because I was obliged to do so in order to have the bill passed. I did not vote for that proposition pure and simple, and I should not, because that is an entirely separate thing.

Mr. SPOONER. I do not think it is. Mr. ALDRICH. Entirely separate. Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President-

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Rhode Island yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. ALDRICH. I do.
Mr. TILLMAN. Is there any evidence here that any of the transcontinental railroads, which are competing against the land-grant railroads that have contracts between the Government and themselves, and which the Government has already performed and which the railroads have not performed—is there any evidence that any of those railroads are here asking the privilege of hauling at half rates? If so, I have not yet heard of it.

Mr. WARREN. With the permission of the Senator from Rhode Island, I will make a statement about that; but if the Senator from Rhode Island does not desire it inserted in his remarks I will wait until he concludes.

Mr. ALDRICH. I am quite willing that anything should be inserted in my remarks, but I should not like the Senator to make too long a speech.

Mr. WARREN. I understand.

Mr. TILLMAN. I suggest that I merely asked if there is any evidence that we had railroads who are here begging to have the privilege of hauling at half price for the Government? If so, I think that is an overwhelming proof and an unanswerable argument in favor of a reduction of railroad rates all over the country, especially across the continent. I agree with the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. Aldrich] that the rule we established here last spring-

Mr. ALDRICH. We thought we had established it. Mr. TILLMAN. Yes; we thought we had, and here at the very first session of Congress after the passage of that act is a proposition to abrogate that principle in favor of the Government itself, which, at least, is not a beggar.

Mr. WARREN. Will the Senator from Rhode Island allow me now?

Mr. ALDRICH. Certainly. Mr. WARREN. I do not know of a single railroad or a single railroad man who has even mentioned this matter. I am supporting it entirely from the standpoint of reducing the expenses of the War Department, but more especially and far more emphatically in favor of the officers and enlisted men themselves, and the transportation of their families.

I will say that it is not certain yet that the Interstate Com-merce Commission will rule that the railroads can not take care of the Government's business at reduced rates; but the railroads have, when applied to for rates, up to now assumed that the Commission would so construe the law. Therefore, on an application of the Government to a railroad which had paid its indebtedness, the railroad replied, "We will be compelled to charge full fares for troops, notwithstanding that our competi-tors are entitled to charge a half rate."

As to the readiness of the railroads, all I know about it is that when the matter came up for adjustment some years ago the War Department and others found themselves in this condition: I have a map here-it is not large enough to spread on the wall-which shows in different colors the number of free roads, the number of half-fare roads, and those that charge full fares. There are at the present time fifty-six land-grant or bond-aided roads. Those fifty-six practically amount now to more than twice that number, because in several cases a large system of railroads has been built up of fifteen or twenty smaller roads or branches and of those branches some are landgrant roads and some are not. So on almost any route you take from here to San Francisco you pass a part of the way over land-grant, part of the way over nonland-grant, and again over land-grant railroads alternately, and consequently you have got a spotted and speckled route. If you have to conform to the principle that the roads must charge full rates, which is half fare in one case and 100 cents on the dollar in another, the complication and inconvenience of it, the almost impossibility of equitably doing it, must be apparent to anybody in billing out a train of troops or in selling tickets over the road.

Some of the land-grant and bond-aided roads are as short as 2.6 miles, and some are over 2,000 miles long. As I say, here is a system made up of a number of other roads, part land-grant and part nonland-grant. We find that by the rate law we have made inequalities, rather than prevented them. We find that condition to exist unless the Interstate Commerce Commission shall construe, as I think the Interstate Commerce Commission may yet construe it-to mean that the Government can make rates that are equal, so far as the Government is concerned.

This amendment was reported by the committee in order to obviate this inconvenience; in order to place the Government right; in order that there might be no uncertainty as to how the Interstate Commerce Commission might construe the law. Furthermore, because the roads can afford to do it, we want to adopt this amendment. Railroads surely can haul a lot of troops over a road a long distance for a much smaller rate per capita than they can allow by picking up individuals who may offer themselves here and there from day to day. That is perfectly obvious.

I have here a list of forty-four railroads that have either paid their indebtedness or that are nonland-grant, or that are part land-grant and part nonland-grant. These forty-four roads cover almost the entire mileage of the central and western portion of the United States. They came in long ago and contracted, or offered to come in and contract, to do the business upon the same basis as the land-grant roads, in order to avoid all of these difficulties. Hence the business has been done for years upon that basis, except where bids were submitted which were for a lower sum. So that, in starting out to go a thousand miles, where you would be on half a dozen land-grant and nonland-grant roads alternating where there was a uniform rate not exceeding 50 per cent, it was convenient, and it was abundantly profitable to the roads, and the Government and all the taxpayers got the general benefit.

Mr. PATTERSON rose.

Mr. WARREN. If I may be permitted, I do not care so particularly about the property feature of the amendment. I am perfectly willing to reduce it, if you please, in that event, however, taking care of the matter of admitting half fare or less for the families of the officers and enlisted men, and let the Interstate Commerce Commission, if they have not settled it, settle it as they will as to merchandise, etc., and we can take that up at some other time.

Mr. HOPKINS. Mr. President-

Mr. ALDRICH. I believe I have the floor. I beg the Senator's pardon. Mr. HOPKINS.

Mr. WARREN. I thank the Senator from Rhode Island for allowing me to interrupt him.

Mr. ALDRICH. I should like to ask the Senator from Wyoming if he understands the Interstate Commerce Commission has a right to reduce rates for certain shippers and not for

Mr. TILLMAN. That inquiry struck me. The Interstate Commerce Commission are not authorized to construe that law and shade it away for the Government or anybody else.

Mr. ALDRICH. That was the inference I got from the remarks of the Senator from Wyoming.

Mr. WARREN. I was very careful, as the Senator will observe, not to undertake to discuss or question the higher power.

I said it was doubtful in my mind, although I am inclined to think they would so rule. It was my idea that it was better while we were dealing with this matter to make it perfectly plain. I will not undertake to say how they will rule on it; but I will give you my guess that they will rule that the roads can carry the property of the Government at reduced rates, provided the same reduction is applied all over the United States.

Mr. ALDRICH. That it can reduce rates to one party?

Mr. WARREN. I do not put it that way.

Mr. ALDRICH. That is the logical and practical effect of it.
Mr. WARREN. No. They may apply the same rates to the Senator from Rhode Island if he wants to put enlisted men in bodies of ten cars each, etc.

Mr. ALDRICH. Do you understand that the Interstate Commerce Commission have power to do that sort of thing?

Mr. WARREN. I am not questioning the power of the Interstate Commerce Commission.

Mr. ALDRICH. If so, they must have much greater power than any of us thought. They have a right to consider rates that are complained of, but not to establish a rate for the whole United States—on the transportation of soldiers of the United States, for instance, or powder or munitions of war-and fix a rate for all the railways of the United States, which would be entirely different from the published rate. If they have any such power as that, they certainly are a higher power.

Mr. WARREN. Will the Senator permit a question right there?

Mr. ALDRICH. Yes.
Mr. WARREN. Does the Senator think it is a practical way to do business to compel one road to charge 100 cents and another road beside it to charge 50 cents for the same business and doing it under a rate law which was supposed to equalize rates?

Is that a fair proposition?

Mr. ALDRICH. If I were a merchant, required by law to treat everybody equal in regard to the transportation of mer-chandise or the transporting of passengers, I would expect to If I were a great government and had made a law which all of its citizens were bound to obey under penalties of fine and imprisonment, I would not plead my own rights, either by contract or otherwise, to take advantage of the situation and have my freights and my passengers carried at a less rate than those of other people.

Mr. PATTERSON and Mr. BACON addressed the Chair.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Rhode Island yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. CULLOM rose.

Mr. ALDRICH. The Senator from Illinois has given

Mr. PATTERSON. I desire to ask the Senator from Wyoming a question for information.

Mr. CULLOM. Mr. President— Mr. BACON. I want to make a suggestion to the Senator from Rhode Island.
Mr. ALDRICH. The Senator from Illinois [Mr. Cullom] has given a notice for this afternoon. I did not realize that it was so late.

Mr. CULLOM. I rose to inquire whether there is any disposition to go on with this bill at this time? I gave notice on yesterday that I would ask to call up resolutions in reference to a deceased Member of the other House.

Mr. WARREN. I will say that while I am very anxious indeed to finish this matter, I prefer that the Senator from Illinois shall decide whether I shall proceed or not. It is his due and right that under the circumstances he should.

Mr. CULLOM. I have inquired somewhat, and I find there is considerable disposition to discuss this bill much longer. I therefore ask leave now to call up the resolutions from the House of Representatives.

Mr. WARREN. Before that is done I will give notice that I shall ask to take this bill up again immediately after the morning business on next Monday morning.

MEMORIAL ADDRESSES ON THE LATE REPRESENTATIVE MARSH.

Mr. CULLOM. Mr. President, I ask that the resolutions from the House of Representatives in commemoration of Hon. Benja-MIN F. MARSH, late a Representative from the State of Illinois, be laid before the Senate.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate the resolutions referred to by the Senator from Illinois, which will be read.

The Secretary read the resolutions, as follows:

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, December 5, 2906.

Resolved. That in pursuance of the special order heretofore adopted the House now proceed to pay tribute to the memory of Hon. BENJAMIN MARSH, late a Member of this House from the State of Illinois.

Resolved. That as a special mark of respect to the memory of the deceased, and in recognition of his distinguished public career, the House, at the conclusion of the exercises to-day, shall stand adjourned.

Resolved, That the Clerk communicate these resolutions to the Senate.

Resolved, That the Clerk send a copy of these resolutions to the family of the deceased.

Mr. CULLOM. Mr. President, I offer the resolutions which I send to the desk.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolutions submitted by the Senator from Illinois will be read.

The Secretary read the resolutions, as follows:

Resolved, That the business of the Senate be now suspended that opertunity may be given for tributes to the memory of Hon. BENJAMIN F. Resolved, That the business of the Senate be now suspended that opportunity may be given for tributes to the memory of Hon. Benjamin F. Marsh, late a Representative from the State of Illinois.

Resolved, That the Secretary communicate these resolutions to the House of Representatives; and

Resolved, That the Secretary be instructed to communicate a copy of the resolutions to the family of the deceased.

The resolutions were considered by unanimous consent, and unanimously agreed to.

Mr. CULLOM. Mr. President, I ask the indulgence of the Senate that I may say a few words of tribute and respect to the memory of my friend the late Benjamin F. Marsh, who served for sixteen years as a Representative in Congress.

I knew General Marsh intimately for more than forty years and always had great admiration for him as a citizen, as a soldier, as a Member of the House. He was a brave, strong, sturdy character, of the type of the early pioneers, almost all of whom have passed away.

Unlike most of the noted men of our State, he was a native son of Illinois, having been born in Hancock County in 1835. From his early manhood until his death he had a more or less prominent part in the public affairs of the State. of the great men in our history he was reared on the farm, but his father was a man of means for those days and was able to give his son the luxury of a liberal college education.

On leaving college he chose the law as his profession and was admitted to the bar in 1860, just when the nation was about to be torn in twain by the greatest civil war of all history.

As he was entering his career as a lawyer, President Lincoln issued his first call for volunteers, and young Marsh was one of the earliest to respond. Failing to secure the acceptance of a company of cavalry which he had raised, he enlisted as a private in the Sixteenth Illinois Infantry, with which regiment he served in Missouri. Later his company of cavalry was accepted, and he was made its captain. It formed a part of that very distinguished cavalry regiment, the Second Illinois. He was afterwards promoted, step by step, until he was finally made colonel of his regiment, in which position he remained until the end of the war.

He did not receive his promotions as a result of favoritism or political influence. Every promotion which he received was for gallantry on the field of battle. The Second Illinois Cavalry saw active service in different parts of the country and participated in some of the greatest battles of the war and in countless minor engagements.

General Marsh's record as a soldier was a brilliant one. His bravery and heroism were never questioned. He served from the beginning to the end of the war, and his military record is one of the most precious heritages which he could leave to his children.

For ten years, after the close of the war he practiced his profession. He was a successful lawyer of far more than the average legal ability. Naturally he took an interest in public affairs, and was for many years one of the leading men in his section of the State.

He was a Republican always. He witnessed the very beginning of the Republican party, in 1856, and from that time until his death he never for a moment wavered in his intense loyalty and devotion to his party. He advocated its principles on the platform, and as a speaker he was earnest, forceful, and General Marsh during the later years of his life manifested a specially great admiration and devotion for two great men one, the present distinguished Speaker of the House, of Illinoisand the other, the late governor and Senator, Richard J. He was appointed by Governor Oglesby as a member Oglesby. of the railroad and warehouse commission of Illinois, one of most important places in the State administration, and, needless to say, he filled it with credit and distinction.

Aside from his record as a soldier, General Marsh will be remembered as a distinguished Member of Congress, where he served for sixteen years.

He was elected first in 1877, and was twice reelected, retired in 1883, and ten years later was again elected and served until 1901, when he was defeated by a small majority. His district was normally Democratic, and I doubt very much whether any Republican could have been elected. A new apportionment of the State having been made, he was elected to the Fifty-eighth Congress and reelected as a Member of the Fifty-ninth Con-

General Marsh was a very useful Member of Congress, attending punctually to his public duties, always having in mind the interest and welfare of his country which he loved and had .

He was a prominent member of the Military Committee and chairman of the Committee on the Militia, and took an active part in framing all of the important legislation coming from those two committees.

It was a great satisfaction and a matter of pride with him that he was a Member of Congress during the Spanish-American war. He was one of the earliest sympathizers with Cuba. His feelings were wrought up to the highest pitch on account of the inhuman treatment of the Cubans; he believed that war alone would bring about their freedom, and he was one of the most earnest advocates in Congress of the war with Spain. He was never more earnest, never more the personification of the brave soldier that he was, than during this period in his advocacy on the floor of the House of a declaration of war. He chafed under the months of seeming hesitancy and delay on the part of the late President McKinley. An aggressive man himself, his sympathetic nature thoroughly aroused, General Marsh did not try to conceal his impatience.

When war was finally declared, I believe, had his age and health permitted, he would have enlisted himself and gone to the front, where he would have probably been given an important command, and would have been a distinguished hero of two wars.

He witnessed with patriotic delight the success of our arms on land and sea, was in thorough sympathy with the treaty of Paris, realizing its important results, and later saw with pride our country taking one of the foremost places among the nations of the earth. He believed in the doctrine of expansion, was not afraid to take up the white man's burden, and had supreme faith in the great future destiny of the Republic.

General Marsh at the time of his death occupied an important position in the House; and, although a very aggressive man, having strong convictions and not hesitating on any oc-casion to give expression to them, he enjoyed in the highest degree the respect and esteem of his colleagues. He passed away at his home in Warsaw, where he was born and where all of his life was spent, an honored Member of Congress and one of the foremost public men of his State.

Mr. HOPKINS. Mr. President, Col. Benjamin F. Marsh is a great figure in the history of Illinois. He was born in Hancock County, that State, in 1835. Chicago was then a straggling village of only a few thousand inhabitants, and the northern half of the State of Illinois was largely unoccupied prairie.

His father, who was one of the prominent men of his section of the State, owned a beautiful place in Hancock Countythe same that was owned and occupied by Colonel Marsh at the time of his death. It was here that his early boyhood was passed, and under the environments of the pioneer life of that day his character was molded and developed.

Fortunately for him, his father's financial condition was such to enable him to give Colonel Marsh a liberal education. Under the direction of the famous Bishop Chase he took a four-year course at a small college in Illinois. It did not have the educational advantages of a Yale or a Harvard, but in Bishop Chase he found a noble character, whose influence in the personal relations that existed between student and instructor brought out the finest traits of character in Colonel MARSH.

Bishop Chase rendered a work in the then outskirts of American civilization that should make his name immortal. His life and great talents were devoted to the education of the young men and women of the then great West.

Among the splendid men who justified the sacrifices that he made in the cause of education not one made a better record than did Col. BENJAMIN F. MARSH. After he had finished his academic course he commenced the study of law in Warsaw, Hancock County, and in due time was admitted to the bar and became a partner of his elder brother in the practice of the law.

Illinois has an exceptionally proud record as respects the bench and bar of the State. Judges Breese, Caton, and Scofield, on the State bench, and Drummond and Blodgett in our Federal courts in the State, will rank with any of the great judges of any other State in the Republic or with any of the distinguished Federal judges whose records have enriched the pages of the judicial history of our country.

At the bar in Illinois we have had some of the most brilliant men that have practiced in any courts in this country or in England. Stephen T. Logan, Browning, Lincoln, Colonel Ingersoll, Leonard Swett, and the celebrated E. D. Baker were lawyers who would rank with the bar of any State, and among this number were lawyers and advocates who would rank with any of the leaders of the English bar.

It was under the inspiration and influence of such names as I have mentioned that Col. Benjamin F. Marsh commenced the practice of law in the little town of Warsaw, Ill. He gave promise of a great future at the bar, but before he had been long in the practice of his profession dark clouds of civil strife overshadowed our national horizon, and when President Lincoln called for men to defend the flag and the Constitution of our common country Colonel Marsh was one of the first to respond. He went to the front as captain of Company G, Second Illinois Cavalry. At the close of the war he returned as colonel of that regiment.

This brief statement of his several promotions is enough to show the brave and fearless soldier that he was. The Second Illinois Cavalry has a proud record. Colonel Marsh, as commander of the regiment, did his full share in making that one of the first cavalry regiments in the Federal service during the

My personal acquaintance with Colonel Marsh commenced many years ago at one of our State Republican conventions. knew of him as having been a Member of Congress for a number of years, and at the time of my personal acquaintance he was serving as one of the railroad and warehouse commissioners of the State under a commission issued to him by Governor Oglesby, of that State. He presented to me a man of strong personality. He was over 6 feet in height, and straight and soldierly in his appearance, with keen and piercing eyes. He would attract attention anywhere. Our homes were separated by several hundred miles. We met only on rare occasions until we both became Members of the Fifty-fourth Congress. with him in that Congress, in the Fifty-fifth, and Fifty-sixth. During this service I learned to know him well and to appreciate the manly qualities of head and heart that he possessed. There was no Member of our delegation who was more thoughtful of his constituents and more earnest in his efforts to serve their many demands made upon his time and strength. It was a pleasure to me to see and hear him in a running debate in the House, especially in the consideration of questions that grew out of the civil war. He was an excellent debater, keen and inci-sive and direct in his utterances. He presented what he had to say with a force and fire that you would hardly expect in one of his years.

His personal relations with the Members of his own delegation were always of the most kindly character; and what is true of them is true of the membership of the several Houses of Representatives in which he served. He was a strong partisan, and on all political questions was radical in his utterances; but he was always a fair fighter and always commanded the respect and admiration of his opponents.

Colonel Marsh was popular with both Democrats and Republicans during his entire service in the House of Representatives. His death was not only deplored by the constituency that had honored him so many times, but by the people of the State of Illinois. We are proud of the record he made and proud of the service that he rendered his State and his country.

DEATH OF REPRESENTATIVE JOHN F. RIXEY.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. W. J. Browning, its Chief Clerk, communicated to the Senate the intelligence of the death of Hon. John F. Rixey, late a Representative from the State of Virginia, and transmitted the resolutions of the House thereon.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following resolutions of the House of Representatives; which were read:

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Resolved, That the House has heard with deep regret and profound sorrow of the death of the Hon. John F. Riney, a Representative from the State of Virginia.

Resolved, That a committee of seventeen Members of the House, with such members of the Senate as may be joined, may be appointed to attend the funeral at Culpeper, Va., and that the necessary expenses attending the execution of this order be paid out of the contingent fund of the House.

Resolved, That the Sergeant-at-Arms be authorized and directed to take such steps as may be necessary for properly carrying out the provisions of this resolution.

Resolved, That the Clerk communicate these resolutions to the Senate and transmit a copy thereof to the family of the deceased.

The Speaker announced the appointment of Mr. Jones, Mr. Hay, Mr. Lamb, Mr. Flood, Mr. Maynard, Mr. Glass, Mr. Slemp, Mr. Southall

Mr. Saunders, of Virginia; Mr. Foss, of Illinois; Mr. Meyer, of Louisiana; Mr. William W. Kitchin, of North Carolina; Mr. Gregg, of Texas; Mr. Williams, of Mississippi; Mr. De Armond, of Missouri; Mr. Bueton, and Mr. Slayden, of Texas, members of the committee on the part of the House.

Mr. DANIEL. Mr. President, this forenoon, as the Members of the two Houses of Congress were assembling for their daily task, intelligence came that the Hon John Franklin Rixey, who for five terms has represented the Eighth district of Virginia in the House of Representatives, had this morning departed this life at his residence in this city.

I move, Mr. President, that this body, having received official notification of his death, adopt the resolutions which I send to the desk.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Virginia proposes resolutions, which will be read.

The Secretary read the resolutions, as follows:

Resolved. That the Senate has heard with deep sensibility the announcement of the death of Hon. JOHN F. RIXEY, late a Representative from the State of Virginia.

Resolved. That a committee of seven Senators be appointed by the Vice-President to join the committee appointed on the part of the House of Representatives to take order for superintending the funeral of the deceased.

Resolved. That the Secretary communicate these resolutions to the committee appointed to the funeral of the deceased.

Resolved. That the Secretary communicate these resolutions to the House of Representatives.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the resolutions submitted by the Senator from Virginia.

The resolutions were unanimously agreed to.

The VICE-PRESIDENT appointed as the committee on the part of the Senate, under the second resolution, Mr. Daniel, Mr. Taliaferro, Mr. Dick, Mr. Patterson, Mr. Ankeny, Mr. Flint, and Mr. Clarke of Arkansas.

Mr. President, as a further mark of respect to Mr. DANIEL. the memory of the deceased, I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was unanimously agreed to; and (at 4 o'clock and 25 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until Monday, February 11, 1907, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

Saturday, February 9, 1907.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The following prayer was offered by the Chaplain, Rev. HENRY N. COUDEN, D. D.:

We come to Thee, O God, our Heavenly Father, praying for that light which never shone on sea or shore, but which illumines the mind, quickens the heart, and makes for righteousness in man, proving his Divine sonship and making the whole world akin; which dignifies the smallest duty, renders easy the hardest tasks, and leads on to heroism and glory when heroes are needed.

Our hearts are profoundly moved this morning by the sudden death of one who for years in modesty and humility worked faithfully and well upon the floor of this House, rendering to his country a service worthy to be recorded by the angels above. We most fervently pray that his colleagues, his friends, and the dear ones of his heart may be comforted by the thought that sometime, somewhere, they will be united to him where sorrows never come. Hear us in the name of Christ, the Lord. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Parkinson, its reading clerk, announced that the Senate had passed with amendments bill of the following title; in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

H. R. 22580. An act making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department, for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, and for other purposes, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1908.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 6364) to incorporate the National Child Labor Committee.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed bill of the following title; in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. 8074. An act to establish a fish-hatching and fish-culture station in the county of Newcastle, Del.

SENATE BILL REFERRED.

Under clause 2, Rule XXIV, Senate bill of the following title was taken from the Speaker's table and referred to its appropriate committee, as indicated below:

S. 8074. An act to establish a fish-hatching and fish-culture station in the county of Newcastle, Del.—to the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the amendments of the Senate to the Indian appropriation bill be nonconcurred in, and that a conference thereon with the Senate be asked.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, I think the House ought to have some information as to what the amendments are.

Mr. SHERMAN. Why, I can not tell the gentleman how many there are or just what they do. The bill was passed yesterday afternoon, but there are a good many amendments. The bill, of course, will eventually go to conference, and the proposition that it go at once to conference I am sure is entirely agreeable to the minority members of the Indian Committee.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Has the gentleman consulted with them? Mr. SHERMAN. Not since the bill passed; no.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker-

Mr. WILLIAMS. I see none of them in their seats.

Mr. SHERMAN. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. STE-PHENS], the senior member of the committee, is not in his seat this morning.
Mr. WILLIAMS.

Will the gentleman defer his request?

Mr. SHERMAN. I will, until later in the day.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, will not the gentleman from New York [Mr. Sherman] ask to have the bill printed with Senate amendments? There were a great many amendments proposed in the Senate.

Mr. SHERMAN. Of course; all of them were defeated before the bill was passed.

Mr. MANN. And let it lie on the table pending the printing with the Senate amendments.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the bill with Senate amendments will be printed and lie on the Speaker's table until Monday.

There was no objection.

NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that general debate on the naval appropriation bill be considered as

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that general debate on the naval appropriation bill be considered as closed.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Speaker, certain time had been accorded to me to participate in the general debate upon this bill. I now ask unanimous consent that I may be allowed to print my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio asks unanimous consent to print his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Upon what subject?
Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Speaker, a certain time was also allotted to me in the general debate, which, under the circumstances, I am willing to abandon with the privilege of printing my remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Upon what subject? Mr. SLAYDEN. The naval bill.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I do not want any mistake to be made. I will state to the gentleman from Mississippi that part of my remarks will be upon the bill and part upon a topic which I consider to be cognate with the subject of the bill.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Upon what subject?

Reserving the right to object, I want to Mr. SHERMAN. state that I was in the chair, and certain gentlemen have asked me if I would accord them time, and I have told one or two that if the time were in the control of the Chair on Monday that I would recognize them. I do not know whether there will be other disposition of the time. Under these circumstances, I should rather hope that the chairman of the committee would not insist upon his request just now, although, of course, I shall not object, but I wanted to announce that situation to him.

Mr. FOSS. I wish to say to the gentleman from New York that the circumstances of the case make it necessary to act in this way.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I have no objection, with the understanding, of course, that the matters upon which gentlemen are to print remarks are not of a political nature. I think that general political speeches ought to be made on the floor. With that understanding I do not object. The SPEAKER. Did the gentleman from Ohio give attention to the statement of the gentleman from Mississippi?

Mr. GROSVENOR. I have heard the statement, and I agree with him entirely.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio and the gentleman from Texas? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois, that all general debate shall be closed on the naval appropriation bill? [After a pause,] The Chair hears none.

Mr. SPARKMAN. I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks on the river and harbor bill in the Record.

A MEMBER. You have five days

Mr. SPARKMAN. I want a little further time.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

DEATH OF HON, JOHN F. RIXEY.

Mr. JONES of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, it is with inexpressible sadness and unfeigned grief that I announce to the House the death of my colleague, the Hon. John F. Rixey, which occurred at the residence in this city of his brother, the Surgeon-General of the Navy, about 9 o'clock this morning. At some future time I shall ask the House to set apart a day that Members may have an opportunity to pay tribute to the personal virtues and public services of my colleague.

I now send to the Clerk's desk and ask to have read the resolutions which I offer, and for which I ask immediate considera-

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved. That the House has heard with deep regret and profound sorrow of the death of Hon. John F. Rixer, a Representative from the State of Virginia.

Resolved, That a committee of seventeen Members of the House, with such members of the Senate as may be joined, may be appointed to attend the funeral at Culpeper, Va., and that the necessary expenses attending the execution of this order be paid out of the contingent fund of the House.

of the House.

Resolved. That the Sergeant-at-Arms be authorized and directed to take such steps as may be necessary for properly carrying out the provisions of this resolution.

Resolved. That the Clerk communicate these resolutions to the Senate and transmit a copy to the family of the deceased.

The question was taken; and the resolutions were unanimously agreed to. The SPEAKER. The Chair announces the following committee.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. Jones of Virginia, Mr. Hay, Mr. Lamb, Mr. Flood, Mr. Maynard, Mr. Glass, Mr. Slemp, Mr. Southall, Mr. Saunders, Mr. Foss, Mr. Meyer, Mr. William W. Kitchin, Mr. Grego, Mr. Williams, Mr. De Armond, Mr. Burton, and Mr. Slayden.

Mr. JONES of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, as a further mark of respect to my deceased colleague, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The SPEAKER. Pending the motion, the Chair will announce that the gentleman from Massachusetts, Mr. Lovering, will preside over the session of the House to-morrow.

The motion to adjourn was then agreed to.

Accordingly (at 12 o'clock and 18 minutes) the House adjourned until Sunday at 12 o'clock m.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, the following executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred, as follows:

A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a copy of a letter from the Secretary of War submitting an estimate of appropriations for service for prevention of deposits in New York Harbor-to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a copy of a letter from the Secretary of the Interior submitting an estimate of appropriation for appraisal and survey of abandoned military reservations—to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.
